amid every obstacle, amid every downheartedness or outward poverty, that for which God sent them. The outward ornament of words would have been misplaced, when the object was to bid a downhearted people, in the Name of God, to do a definite work. Haggai sets before his people cause and effect; that they denied to God what was His, and that God denied to them what was His to give or to withhold. His sermon was, in His words Whom he foretold; Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. He spake in the name of God, and was obeyed.

“The Holy Ghost, Who spake by the mouth of the prophets, willed that he by a foreboding name should be called Haggai, i. e. ‘festive,’ according to the subject whereof He should speak by his mouth. Yet was there not another festiveness in the prophet’s heart, than the joy which he had or could have with the people, from the rebuilding of that temple made with hands, again to be defiled and burned with fire irrecoverably? Be it that the rebuilding of that temple, which he saw before him, was a matter of great festive joy; yet not in or for itself, but for Him, the festive joy of saints and angels and men, Christ; because when the temple should be rebuilt, the walls also of the city should be rebuilt and the city again inhabited and the people be united in one, of whom Christ should be born, fulfilling the truth of the promise made to Abraham and David and confirmed by an oath. So then we, by aid of the Holy Spirit, so enter upon what Haggai here speaketh, as not doubting that he altogether aimeth at Christ. And so may we in some sort be called or be Haggais, i. e. ‘festive,’ by contemplating that same, which because he should contemplate, he was, by a Divine foreboding, called Haggai.”

CHAP. I. 1. In the second year of Darius, i. e. Hystaspis. The very first word of prophecy after the Captivity betokens that they were restored, not yet as before, yet so, as to be hereafter, more than before. The earthly type, by God's appointment, was fading away, that the Heavenly truth might dawn. The earthly king was withdrawn, to make way for the Heavenly. God had said of Jeconiah, <sup>1</sup> No man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Israel: and so now prophecy begins to be dated by the years of a foreign earthly ruler, as in the Baptism of the Lord Himself<sup>2</sup>. Yet God gives back in mercy more than He withdraws in chastisement. The earthly rule is suspended, that men might look out more longingly for the Heavenly.

In the sixth month. They counted by their own months, beginning with Nisan, the first of the ecclesiastical year, (which was still used for holy purposes and in sacred history) although, having no more any kings, they dated their years by those of the empire, to which they were subject<sup>3</sup>. In the sixth month, part of our July and August, their harvest was past, and the dearth, which they doubtless ascribed (as we do) to the seasons, and which Haggai pointed out to be a judgement from God, had set in for this year also. The months being lunar, the first day of the month was the festival of the new moon, a popular feast<sup>4</sup> which their forefathers had kept<sup>5</sup>, while they neglected the weightier matters of the law, and which the religious in Israel had kept, even while separated from the worship at Jerusalem<sup>6</sup>. In its very first day, when the grief for the barren year was yet fresh, Haggai was stirred to exhort them to consider their ways; a pattern for Christian preachers, to bring home to people's souls the meaning of God's judgements. God directs the very day to be noted, in which He called the people anew to build His temple, both to shew the readiness of their obedience, and a precedent to us to keep in memory days and seasons, in which He stirs our souls to build more diligently His spiritual temple in our souls<sup>7</sup>.

By the hand of Haggai. God doth well-nigh all things which He doeth for man through the hands of men. He committeth His words and works for men into the hands of men as His stewards, to dispense faithfully to His household<sup>8</sup>. Hence He speaks so often of the law, which He commanded <sup>9</sup> by the hand of Moses; but also as to other prophets, Nathan<sup>10</sup>, Ahijah<sup>11</sup>, Jehu<sup>12</sup>, Jonah<sup>13</sup>, Isaiah<sup>14</sup>, Jeremiah<sup>15</sup>, and the prophets generally<sup>16</sup>. The very Prophets of God, although gifted with a Divine Spirit, still were willing and conscious instruments in speaking His words.

the month, came the word of the LORD † by Haggai the prophet unto <sup>b</sup> Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, || governor of Judah, and to <sup>c</sup> Joshua the son of <sup>d</sup> Josedech, the high priest, saying,

Unto Zerubbabel (so called from being born in Babylon) the son of Shealtiel. By this genealogy Zerubbabel is known in the history of the return from the captivity in Ezra and Nehemiah<sup>17</sup>. God does not say by Jeremiah, that Jeconiah should have no children, but that he should in his life-time be childless, as it is said of those married to the uncle's or brother's widow, <sup>18</sup> they shall die childless. Jeremiah rather implies that he should have children, but that they should die untimely before him. For he calls Jeconiah, <sup>19</sup> a man who shall not prosper in his days; for there shall not prosper a man of his seed, sitting on the throne of David, and ruling any more in Israel. He should die (as the word means) barred<sup>20</sup> of all, alone and desolate. The own father of Shealtiel appears to have been Neri<sup>21</sup>, of the line of Nathan son of David; not, of the line of the kings of Judah. Neri married, one must suppose, a daughter of Assir, son of <sup>22</sup> Jeconiah whose grandson Shealtiel was; and Zerubbabel was the own son of Pedaiah, the brother of Shealtiel, as whose son he was in the legal genealogy inscribed, according to the law as to those who die childless<sup>23</sup>; or as having been adopted by Shealtiel being himself childless, as Moses was called the son of the daughter of Pharaoh<sup>24</sup>. So broken was the line of the unhappy Jehoiachin, two thirds of whose own life was passed in the prison<sup>25</sup>, into which Nebuchadnezzar cast him.

Governor of Judah. The foreign name<sup>26</sup> betokens that the civil rule was now held from a foreign power, although Cyrus shewed the Jews the kindness of placing one of themselves, of royal extraction also, as his deputy over them. The lineage of David is still in authority, connecting the present with the past, but the earthly kingdom had faded away. Under the name Sheshbazzar Zerubbabel is spoken of both as the prince<sup>27</sup> and the governor<sup>28</sup> of Judah. With him is joined Joshuah the son of Josedech, the high priest, whose father went into captivity<sup>29</sup>, when his grand-father Seraiah was slain by Nebuchadnezzar<sup>30</sup>. The priestly line also is preserved. Haggai addresses these two, the one of the royal, the other of the priestly, line, as jointly responsible for the negligence of the people; he addresses the people only through them. Together, they are types of Him, the true King and true Priest, Christ Jesus, Who by the Resurrection raised again the true temple, His Body, after it had been destroyed<sup>31</sup>.

pavão could hardly become pagvao, and even this would still be considerably different from Pechah. The insertion of a g before a v in Zend is totally anomalous. It rests entirely on the uncertain identification of dregvanf, "bad," with drevanf, for in the second instance, huova is much more likely a corruption of huogva, than vice versa. Pavdo in Zend would mean, protector, but like the Sanskrit pāda, it occurs only at the end of compounds. The one passage, quoted in support of its occurring as a separate noun, seems to me to contain an etymological play, where pavdo is used as an independent noun in order to explain the two compounds, paçça-pavdo and pard-pavdo, i. e., protecting behind and protecting in front, as if we were to say, 'he is a tector, both as a pro-tector and sub-tector.'

2. Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, This people say. Not Zerubbabel or Joshua, but this people. He says not, My people, but reproachfully this people, as, in acts, disowning Him, and so deserving to be disowned by Him. The time is not come, lit. It is not time to come, time for the house of the Lord to be built<sup>1</sup>. They might yet sit still; the time for them to come was not yet; for not yet was the time for the house of the Lord to be built. Why it was not time, they did not say. The government did not help them; the original grant by Cyrus<sup>2</sup> was exhausted; the Samaritans hindered them, because they would not own them, (amid their mishmash of worship, worshipping, our Lord tells them, they <sup>3</sup> know not what,) as worshippers of the same God. It was a bold excuse, if they said, that the 70 years during which the temple was to lie waste, were not yet ended. The time had long since come, when, 16 years before, Cyrus had given command that the house of God should be built. The prohibition to build, under Artaxerxes or Pseudo-Smerdis, applied directly to the city and its walls, not to the temple, except so far as the temple itself, from its position, might be capable of being used as a fort, as it was in the last siege of Jerusalem. Yet in itself a building of the size of the temple, apart from outer buildings, could scarcely so be used. The prohibition did not hinder the building of stately private houses, as appears from Haggai's rebuke. The hindrances also, whatever they were, had not begun with that decree. Any how the death of Pseudo-Smerdis had now, for a year, set them free, had they had any zeal for the glory and service of God. Else Haggai had not blamed them. God, knowing that He should bend the heart of Darius, as He had that of Cyrus, requires the house to be built without the king's decree. It was built in faith, that God would bring through what He had enjoined, although outward things were as adverse now as before. And what He commanded He prospered<sup>4</sup>.

There was indeed a second fulfilment of seventy years, from the destruction of the temple by Nebuchadnezzar B.C. 586, to its consecration in the 6th year of Darius B.C. 516. But this was through the wilfulness of man, prolonging the desolation decreed by God, and Jeremiah's prophecy relates to the people not to the temple.

"The prophet addresses his discourse to the chiefs [in Church and state] and yet accuses directly, not their listlessness but that of the people, in order both to honour them before the people and to teach that their sins are to be blamed privately not publicly, lest their authority should be injured, and the people incited to rebel against them; and also to shew that this fault was directly that of the people, whom he reproves before their princes, that, being openly convicted before them, it might be ashamed, repent, and obey God; but that indirectly this fault touched the chiefs themselves, whose office it was to urge the people to this work of God." "For seldom is the Prince free from the guilt of his subjects, as either assenting to, or winking at them, or not coercing them, though able."

Since also Christians are the temple of God, all this prophecy of Haggai is applicable to them. "When thou seest one who has lapsed thinking and preparing to build through chastity the temple which he had before destroyed through passion, and yet delaying day by day, say to him, 'Truly thou also art of the people of the captivity, and sayest, The time is not yet come for building the house of the Lord.' Whoso has once settled to restore the temple of God, to him every time is suited for building, and the prince, Satan, cannot hinder, nor the enemies around. As soon as being thyself converted, thou callest upon the name of the Lord, He will say, Behold Me." "To him who willet to do right, the time is always present; the good and right-minded have power to fulfil what is to the glory of God, in every time and place."

3. And the word of the Lord came. "Before, he prophesied nothing, but only recited the saying of the people; now he refutes it in his prophecy, and repeats, again and again, that he says this not of himself, but from the mind and mouth of God." It is characteristic of Haggai to inculcate thus frequently, that his words are not his own, but the words of God. Yet "the prophets, both in their threats and prophecies, repeat again and again, Thus saith the Lord, teaching us, how we should prize the word of God, hang upon it, have it ever in our mouth, reverence, ruminate on, utter, praise it, make it our continual delight."

4. Is it time for you, [you<sup>9</sup>] being what you are, the creatures of God, to dwell in your cieled houses<sup>10</sup>, more emphatically, in your houses, and those cieled, probably with costly woods, such as cedar<sup>11</sup>. But where then was the excuse of want of means? They imitated, in their alleged poverty, what is spoken of as magnificent in their old kings, Solomon and Shallum, but not having, as Solomon first did, <sup>12</sup> covered the house of God with beams and rows of cedar. "Will ye dwell in houses artificially adorned, not so much for use as for delight, and shall My dwelling-place, wherein was the Holy of holies, and the Cherubim, and the table of shewbread, be bestreamed with rains, desolated in solitude, scorched by the sun?"

"With these words carnal Christians are reproved, who have no glow of zeal for God, but are full of self-love, and so make no effort to repair, build, or strengthen the material temples of Christ, and houses assigned to His worship, when aged, ruinous, decaying or destroyed, but build for themselves curious, voluptuous, superfluous dwellings. In these the love of Christ gloweth not; these Isaiah threateneth, <sup>14</sup> Woe to you who join house to house and field to field, and regard not the work of the Lord!"

To David and Solomon the building of God's temple was their heart's desire; to early Christian Emperors, to the ages of faith, the building of Churches; now mostly, owners of lands build houses for this world's profit, and leave it to the few to build in view of eternity, and for the glory of God.

set your heart upon] your ways, what they had been doing, what they were doing, and what those doings had led to, and would lead to. This is ever present to the mind of the prophets, as speaking God's words, that our acts are not only ways in which we go, each day of life being a continuance of the day before; but that they are ways which lead somewhat in God's Providence and His justice; to some end of the way, good or bad. So God says by Jeremiah, <sup>1</sup>I set before you the way of life and the way of death; and David, <sup>2</sup>Thou wilt shew me the path of life, where it follows, In Thy Presence is the fulness of joy and at Thy Right Hand there are pleasures for evermore; and Solomon, <sup>3</sup>Reproofs of instruction are the way of life; and, he is in <sup>4</sup>the way of life who keepeth instruction; and he who forsaketh rebuke, erreth; and, <sup>5</sup>The way of life is above to the wise, that he may depart from hell beneath; and of the adulterous woman, <sup>6</sup>Her house are the ways of hell, going down to the chambers of death; and <sup>7</sup>her feet go down unto death; her steps take hold on hell; lest thou shouldest ponder the path of life. Again, <sup>8</sup>There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, and the end thereof are the ways of death; and contrariwise, <sup>9</sup>The path of the righteous is a shining light, shining more and more until the midday. <sup>10</sup>The ways of darkness are the ways which end in darkness; and when Isaiah says, <sup>11</sup>The way of peace hast thou not known, he adds, whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace. They who choose not peace for their way, shall not find peace in and for their end.

On these your ways, Haggai says, set your hearts, not thinking of them lightly, nor giving a passing thought to them, but fixing your minds upon them; as God says to Satan, <sup>12</sup>Hast thou set thy heart on My servant Job? and God is said to set His eye or His face upon man for good <sup>13</sup>or for evil <sup>14</sup>. He speaks also, not of setting the mind, applying the understanding, giving the thoughts, but of setting the heart, as the seat of the affections. It is not a dry weighing of the temporal results of their ways, but a loving dwelling upon them; for repentance without love is but the gnawing of remorse.

<sup>20</sup>He sows much to his own heart, but brings in little, who by reading and hearing knows much of the heavenly commands, but by negligence in deeds bears little fruit. He eats and is not satisfied, who, hearing the words of God, coveteth the gains or glory of the world. Well is he said not to be satisfied, who eateth one thing, hungereth after another. He drinks and is not inebriated, who inclineth his ear to the voice of preaching, but changeth not his mind. For through inebriation the mind of those who drink is changed. He then who is devoted to the knowledge of God's word, yet still desireth to gain the things of the world, drinks and is not inebriated. For were he inebriated, no doubt he would have changed his mind and no longer seek earthly things, or love the vain and passing things which he had loved. For the Psalmist says of the elect, <sup>21</sup>they shall be inebriated with the richness of Thy house, because they shall be filled with such love of Almighty God, that, their mind being changed, they seem to be strangers to themselves, fulfilling what is written, <sup>22</sup>If any will come after Me, let him deny himself."

6. Ye have sown much. The prophet expresses the habitualness of these visitations by a vivid present. He marks no time and so expresses the more vividly that it was at all times. It is one continually present evil. Ye have sown much and there is a bringing in little; there is eating and not to satisfy; there is drinking and not to exhilarate; there is clothing and not to be warm <sup>23</sup>. It is not for the one or the other years, as, since the first year of Darius Hystaspis; it is one continued visitation, coordinate with one continued negligence. As long as the sin lasted, so long the punishment. The visitation itself was twofold; impoverished harvests, so as to supply less sustenance; and various indisposition of the frame, so that what would, by God's appointment in nature, satisfy, gladden, warm, failed of its effect. And he that laboureth for hire, gaineth himself hire into a bag full of holes [lit. perforated]. The labour pictured is not only fruitless, but wearisome and vexing. There is a seeming result of all the labour, something to allure hopes; but forthwith it is gone. The heathen assigned a like baffling of hope as one of the punishments of hell. <sup>24</sup>Better and wiser to seek to be blessed by God, Who bestoweth on us all things. And this will readily come to those who choose to be of the same mind with Him and prefer what is for His glory to their own. For so saith the Saviour Himself to us, <sup>25</sup>Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

<sup>26</sup>He loses good deeds by evil acts, who takes account of his good works, which he has before his eyes, and forgets the faults which creep in between; or who, after what is good, returns to what is vain and evil. <sup>27</sup>Money is seen in the pierced bag, when it is cast in, but when it is lost, it is not seen. They then who look how much they give, but do not weigh how much they gain wrongly, cast their rewards into a pierced bag. Looking to the Hope of their confidence they bring them together; not looking, they lose them."

8 Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the LORD.

9 <sup>k</sup> Ye looked for much, and, lo, it came to the end, or by seeking human praise, or by vainglory within, not keeping spiritual riches under the guardianship of humility. Such are vain and unprofitable men, of whom the Saviour saith, <sup>1</sup> Verily I say unto you, they have their reward."

8. Go up into the mountain. Not Mount Lebanon, whence the cedars had been brought for the first temple; whence also Zerubbabel and Joshua had procured some out of Cyrus' grant<sup>2</sup>, at the first return from the captivity. They were not required to buy, expend, but simply to give their own labour. They were themselves to go up to the mountain, i.e. the mountainous country where the trees grew, and bring them. So, in order to keep the feast of tabernacles, Ezra made a proclamation<sup>3</sup> in all their cities and in Jerusalem, go ye up to the mountain and bring leafy branches of vines, olives, myrtles, palms. The palms, any how, were timber. God required not goodly stones, such as had been already used, and such as hereafter, in the temple which was built, were the admiration even of disciples of Jesus<sup>4</sup>, but which were, for the wickedness of those who rejected their Saviour, not to be left, one stone upon another. He required not costly gifts, but the heart. The neglect to build the temple was neglect of Himself, Who ought to be worshipped there. His worship sanctified the offering; offerings were acceptable, only if made with a free heart.

And I will have pleasure in it. God, Who has declared that He has no <sup>5</sup> pleasure in thousands of rams, or ten thousands of rivers of oil, had delight in <sup>6</sup> them that feared Him, that are upright in their way<sup>7</sup>, that deal truly<sup>8</sup>, in the prayer of the upright<sup>9</sup>; and so in the temple too, when it should be built to His glory.

And will be glorified<sup>10</sup>. God is glorified in man, when man serves Him; in Himself, when He manifests aught of His greatness; in His great doings to His people<sup>11</sup>, as also in the chastisement of those who disobey Him<sup>12</sup>. God allows that glory, which shines ineffably throughout His creation, to be obscured here through man's disobedience, to shine forth anew on his renewed obedience. The glory of God, as it is the end of the creation, so is it His creature's supreme bliss. When God is really glorified, then can He shew forth His glory, by His grace and acceptance. <sup>13</sup> The glory of God is our glory. The more sweetly God is glorified, the more it profits us: yet not our profit, but the glory of God is itself our end; so the prophet closes in that which is our end, God will be glorified.

materials, the spiritual principles in inspired Scripture, whereby he may secure and ground the conception of God, and may shew that the way of the Incarnation was well-ordered, and may collect what appertains to accurate knowledge of spiritual erudition and moral goodness. Nay, each of us may be thought of, as the temple and house of God. For Christ dwelleth in us by the Spirit, and we are temples of the living God, according to the Scripture<sup>15</sup>. Let each then build up his own heart by right faith, having the Saviour as the precious foundation. And let him add thereto other materials, obedience, readiness for anything, courage, endurance, continence. So being framed together by that which every joint supplieth, shall we become a holy temple, a habitation of God through the Spirit<sup>16</sup>. But those who are slow to faith, or who believe but are sluggish in shaking off passions and sins and worldly pleasure, thereby cry out in a manner, The time is not come to build the house of the Lord."

9. Ye looked, lit. a looking; as though he said, it has all been one looking, for much, for increase, the result of all sowing, in the way of nature: and behold it came to little, i.e. less than was sown; as Isaiah denounced to them of old by God's word, <sup>17</sup> the seed of a homer shall yield an ephah, i.e. one tenth of what was sown. And ye brought it home, and I blew upon it, so as to disperse it, as, not the wheat, but the chaff is blown before the wind. This, in whatever way it came to pass, was a further chastisement of God. The little seed which they brought in lessened through decay or waste. Why? saith the Lord of hosts. God asks by his prophet, what He asks in the awakened conscience. <sup>18</sup> God with rebukes chastens man for sin. Conscience, when alive, confesses for what sin; or it asks itself, if memory does not supply the special sin. Unawakened, it murmurs about the excess of rain, the drought, the blight, the mildew, and asks, not itself, why, in God's Providence, these inflictions came in these years? They felt doubtless the sterility in contrast with the exceeding prolificness of Babylonia<sup>19</sup>, as they contrasted the light bread<sup>20</sup>, the manna, with <sup>21</sup> the plenteousness of Egypt. They ascribed probably their meagre crops (as we mostly do) to mere natural causes, perhaps to the long neglect of the land during the captivity. God forces the question upon their consciences, in that Haggai asks it in His Name, in Whose hands all powers stand, saith the Lord of hosts. They have not to talk it over among themselves, but to answer Almighty God, why? That why? strikes into the inmost depths of conscience!

Because of My house which is waste, and ye run lit. are running, all the while, each to his own house<sup>22</sup>. They were absorbed in their material interests, and had no time for those

<sup>3</sup> To those who are slow to fulfil what is for the glory of God, and the things whereby His house, the Church, is firmly stayed, neither the heavenly dew cometh, which enricheth hearts and minds, nor the fruitfulness of the earth; i. e. right action; not food nor wine nor use of oil. But they will be ever strengthless and joyless, unenriched by spiritual oil, and remain without taste or participation of the blessing through Christ."

10. Therefore, for you, on your account <sup>4</sup>; for your sins <sup>5</sup>, He points out the moral cause of the drought, whereas men think of this or that cause of the variations of the seasons, and we, e. g. take into our mouths Scripture-words, as murrain of cattle, and the like, and think of nothing less than why it was sent, or Who sent it. Haggai directs the mind to the higher Cause, that as they withheld their service from God, so, on their account and by His will, His creatures withheld <sup>6</sup> their service from them.

11. And I called for a drought upon the land. God called to the people and they would not hear. It is His ever-repeated complaint to them. I called unto you, and ye would not hear. He called to His inanimate creatures to punish them, and they obeyed. So Elisha tells the woman, whose son he had restored to life, <sup>7</sup> The Lord hath called to the famine, and it shall also come to the land seven years.

And upon men, in that the drought was oppressive to man. The Prophet may also allude to the other meaning of the word, "waste," "desolation." They had left the house of the Lord <sup>8</sup> waste, therefore God called for waste, desolation, upon them.

12. Then Zerubbabel, and all the remnant of the people,

<sup>9</sup> This is the almost uniform usage of נשאר, "remnant which remains over," mostly after the rest have been destroyed or carried captive. See above on Am. i. 8; add, the remnant of Judah, Jer. xl. 11, xlii. 19, xliii. 5, xlv. 12, 14, of Israel, Zeph. iii. 13, Ez. xi. 13; whole remnant of the people, Jer. xli. 10, 16; of Ashdod, Jer. xxv. 20; of the coast of Caphtor, Ib. xlvii. 4; of their valley, Ib. 5; of the coast of the sea, Ez. xxv. 16; of the nations, Ib. xxxvi. 3, 4, 5; of the land, נשאר, Is. xv. 9; of My people, Zeph.

12 ¶ Then Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the LORD their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the LORD their God had sent him, and the people did fear before the LORD, not, "the rest of people" but "the remnant <sup>9</sup>," those who remained over from the captivity, the fragment of the two tribes, which returned to their own land, hearkened unto the voice of the Lord. This was the beginning of a conversion. In this one thing they began to do, what, all along, in their history, and most in their decay before the captivity they refused to do—obey God's word. So God sums up their history, by Jeremiah, <sup>10</sup> I spake unto thee in thy prosperity, thou saidst, I will not hear. This is thy way from thy youth, that thou hearkenedst not unto My voice. Zephaniah still more briefly, <sup>11</sup> she hearkened not unto [any] voice. Now in reference, it seems, to that account of their disobedience, Haggai says, using the self-same formula, <sup>12</sup> they hearkened unto the voice of the Lord, according to the words of Haggai. They obeyed, not vaguely, or partly, but exactly, according to the words which the messenger of God spake.

And they feared the Lord. <sup>13</sup> "Certainly the presence of the Divine Majesty is to be feared with great reverence." <sup>14</sup> "The fear of punishment at times transports the mind to what is better, and the infliction of sorrows harmonises the mind to the fear of God; and that of the Proverbs comes true, <sup>15</sup> He that feareth the Lord shall be recompensed, and the fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and Wisdom, the fear of the Lord is honour and glory, and the fear of the Lord shall rejoice the heart, and giveth joy and gladness and a long life. See how gently and benevolently God smites us."

<sup>16</sup> See how the lovingkindness of God forthwith goes along with all changes for the better. For Almighty God changes along with those who will to repent, and promises that He will be with them; which what can equal? For when God is with us, all harm will depart from us, all good come in to us."

13. And Haggai, the Lord's messenger. Malachi, whose own name was framed to express that he was the Lord's messenger, and Haggai alone use the title, as the title of a prophet; perhaps as forerunners of the great prophet whom Malachi announced. Malachi also speaks of the priest, as <sup>17</sup> the messenger of the Lord of hosts, and prophecies of John Baptist as <sup>18</sup> the messenger of the Lord, who should go before His face. Haggai, as he throughout repeats that his words were God's words, frames a new word <sup>19</sup>, to express, in the language of the New Testament <sup>20</sup>; that he had an embassy from God; in the Lord's message.

ii. 9; of His heritage, Mi. vii. 18; thy remnant, Is. xiv. 30, Ez. v. 10; its remnant, Is. xlv. 17; their remnant, Jer. xv. 9; and of those who had actually returned, Zech. viii. 6, 11, 12. In two places in which it signifies "the rest" (Jer. xxxix. 3, 1 Chr. xii. 88), it is at least the rest of a whole, already mentioned. A third only, Neh. vii. 72, is uncertain. The word is used almost exclusively by the prophets.

CHAPTER II.

1 He encourageth the people to the work, by promise

I am with you. All the needs and longings of the creature are summed up in those two words, I with-you. "Who art Thou and who am I? Thou, He Who Is; I, he who am not;" nothing, yea worse than nothing. Yet if <sup>1</sup> God be for us, S. Paul asks, who can be against us? Our Blessed Lord's parting promise to the Apostles, and in them to the Church, was, <sup>2</sup> Lo I am with you alway, even to the end of the world. The all-containing assurance goes beyond any particular promise of aid, as, <sup>3</sup> I will help you, and will protect you, so that your building shall have its completion. This is one fruit of it; <sup>4</sup> since I am in the midst of you, no one shall be able to hinder your building. But, more widely, the words bespeak His presence in love, Who knows all our needs, and is Almighty to support and save us in all. So David says, <sup>5</sup> when I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me; and God says by another, <sup>6</sup> I will be with him in trouble, and by Isaiah, <sup>7</sup> When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee.

14. And the Lord stirred up the spirit. The words are used of any strong impulse from God to fulfil His will, whether in those who execute His will unknowingly as Pul<sup>8</sup>, to carry off the trans-Jordanic tribes, or the Philistines and Arabians against Jehoram<sup>9</sup>, or the Medes against Babylon<sup>10</sup>; or knowingly, as of Cyrus to restore God's people and rebuild the temple<sup>11</sup>, or of the people themselves to return<sup>12</sup>. "The spirit of Zerubbabel and the spirit of Joshua were stirred, that the government and priesthood may build the temple of God: the spirit of the people too, which before was asleep in them; not the body, not the soul, but the spirit, which knoweth best how to build the temple of God." <sup>13</sup> The Holy Spirit is stirred up in us, that we should enter the house of the Lord, and do the works of the Lord."

<sup>14</sup> Again, observe that they did not set themselves to choose to do what should please God, before He was with them and stirred up their spirit. We shall know hence also, that although one choose zealously to do good and be in earnest therein, yet he will accomplish nothing, unless God be with him, raising him up to dare, and sharpening him to endure, and removing all torpor. For so the wondrous Paul says of those entrusted with the divine preaching, <sup>15</sup> I laboured more abundantly than they all, yet added very wisely, yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me, and the Saviour Himself saith to the holy Apostles, <sup>16</sup> Without Me of greater glory to the second temple than was in the first. 10 In the type of holy things and unclean he sheweth their sins hindered the work. 20 God's promise to Zerubbabel.

Before
cir. 520.

IN the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the LORD † by the prophet Haggai, † Heb. by the hand of. saying,

2 Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and to the residue of the people, saying,

ye can do nothing. For He is our desire, He, our courage to any good work; He our strength, and, if He is with us, we shall do well, <sup>17</sup> building ourselves to a holy temple, a habitation of God in the Spirit; if He depart and withdraws, how should any doubt, that we should fail, overcome by sluggishness and want of courage?"

15. In the four and twentieth day of the month. The interval of twenty three days must have been spent in preparation, since the message came on the first of the month, and the obedience was immediate.

ii. 1. In the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month. This was the seventh day of the feast of tabernacles<sup>18</sup>, and its close. The eighth day was to be a sabbath, with its <sup>19</sup> holy convocation, but the commemorative feast, the dwelling in booths, in memory of God's bringing them out of Egypt, was to last seven days. The close then of this feast could not but revive their sadness at the glories of their first deliverance by God's mighty hand and outstretched arm, and their present fewness and poverty. This depression could not but bring with it heavy thoughts about the work, in which they were, in obedience to God, engaged; and that, all the more, since Isaiah and Ezekiel had prophesied of the glories of the Christian Church under the symbol of the temple. This despondency Haggai is sent to relieve, owning plainly the reality of its present grounds, but renewing, on God's part, the pledge of the glories of this second temple, which should be thereafter.

3. Who is left among you? The question implies that there were those among them, who had seen the first house in its glory, yet but few. When the foundations of the first temple were laid, there were many. <sup>20</sup> Many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers, ancient men, that had seen the first house, when the foundations of this house were laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice. Fifty nine years had elapsed from the destruction of the temple in the eleventh year of Zedekiah to the first of Cyrus; so that old men of seventy years had seen the first temple, when themselves eleven years old. In this second of Darius seventy years had passed, so that those of 78 or 80 years might still well remember it. Ezra's father, Seraiah, was slain in the eleventh year of Zedekiah; so he must have been born at latest a few months later; yet he lived to the second of Artaxerxes.

Is not such as it is<sup>1</sup>, as nothing? Besides the richness of the sculptures in the former temple, everything, which admitted of it, was overlaid with gold; <sup>2</sup> Solomon overlaid the whole house with gold, until he had finished all the house, the whole altar by the oracle, the two cherubim, the floor of the house, the doors of the holy of holies and the ornaments of it, the cherubims thereon and the palm trees he covered with gold fitted upon the carved work; <sup>3</sup> the altar of gold and the table of gold, whereupon the shewbread was, the ten candlesticks of pure gold, with the flowers and the lamps and the tongs of gold, the bowls, the snuffers and the basons and the spoons and the censers of pure gold, and hinges of pure gold for all the doors of the temple. <sup>4</sup> The porch that was in the front of the house, twenty cubits broad and 120 cubits high, was overlaid within with pure gold; the house glistened with precious stones; and the gold (it is added) was gold of Parvaim, a land distant of course and unknown to us. Six hundred talents of gold (about £4,320,000<sup>5</sup>), were employed in overlaying the Holy of holies. The upper chambers were also of gold; the weight of the nails was fifty shekels of gold.

4. Yet now be strong—and work. They are the words with which David exhorted Solomon his son to be earnest and to persevere in the building of the first temple. <sup>6</sup> Take heed now, for the Lord hath chosen thee to build an house for the sanctuary: be strong and do. <sup>7</sup> Be strong and of good courage, and do. This combination of words occurs once only elsewhere<sup>8</sup>, in Jehoshaphat's exhortation to the <sup>9</sup> Levites and priests and chiefs of the fathers of Israel, whom he had set as judges in Jerusalem. Haggai seems then to have adopted the words, with the purpose of suggesting to the down-hearted people, that there was need of the like exhortation, in view of the building of the former temple, whose relative glory so depressed them. The word be strong (elsewhere rendered, be of good courage) occurs commonly in exhortations to persevere and hold fast, amid whatever obstacles<sup>10</sup>.

W. Poole in Smith Bibl. Dict. p. 1784, 1735,) the gold talent would be £300 × 24, = £7,200; and 600 gold talents £4,320,000. ing. The more exact idiom would have been "Remember," "take to heart." But the Prophet points to it the more energetically, because he casts it, as it were, into the midst, not bound up with any one verb. This would be the rather done in speaking to the people, as David to his followers<sup>12</sup>, That which the Lord hath given us and hath preserved us and given the company against us into our hands! i. e. "Would you deal thus with it?" The abrupt form rejects it as shocking. So here, The word which I covenanted with you, i. e. this, I will be with you, was the central all-containing promise, to which God pledged Himself when He brought them out of Egypt. He speaks to them as being one with those who came up out of Egypt, as if they were the very persons. The Church, ever varying in the individuals of whom it is composed, is, throughout all ages, in God's sight, one; His promises to the fathers are made to the children in them. So the Psalmist says, There (at the dividing of the Red Sea and the Jordan) do we rejoice in Him, as if present there; and our Lord promises to the Apostles, I am with you always even to the end of the world, by an ever-present Presence with them and His Church founded by them in Him.

My Spirit abideth among you, as the Psalmist says, <sup>14</sup> they [the heavens] perish and Thou abidest; <sup>15</sup> The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever; <sup>16</sup> His righteousness endureth for ever. The Spirit of God is God the Holy Ghost, with His manifold gifts. Where He is, is all good. As the soul is in the body, so God the Holy Ghost is in the Church, Himself its life, and bestowing on all and each every good gift, as each and all have need. As S. Paul says of the Church of Christ; <sup>17</sup> There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God, Who worketh all in all. All these worketh one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as He will. But above and beyond all gifts He is present as the Spirit of holiness and love, making the Church and those in whom He individually dwells, acceptable to God. Special applications, such as the Spirit of wisdom and might; a spirit such as He gave to Moses to judge His people<sup>18</sup>; the spirit of prophecy<sup>19</sup>; or the spirit given to Bezaleel and Aholiab for the work of the sanctuary<sup>20</sup>—these recognise in detail the one great truth, work; b) Haggai is exhorting them to this one work of rebuilding the temple, not to obedience to the law generally; c) he speaks of what God had promised them, not of their duties to God. 2) To supply אֲנִי "remember," or any like word, is arbitrary, unless it means that we should fill up the meaning by some such word. 3) To construe, "Remember the word which I covenanted with you, fear not" (Ew.); a) gives undue prominence to the absence of fear, which was one consequence of God's covenant that He would be their God, they His people, not the covenant itself; b) Fear not, is elsewhere the counterpart and supplement of the exhortation, "be strong," 2 Chr. xxv. 8, Is. xxxv. 41. c) In Ex. xx. 20, (referred to by Ew.) "fear not" is only Moses' exhortation on occasion of the terrors of the manifestation of God on Mt. Sinai. 4) It is doubly improbable, that it, as well as אֲנִי, should be the subject of the sing. אֲנִי. The אֲנִי and the אֲנִי seem to be different constructions, in order to prevent this. Büttcher terms it, "an acc. abs. of the object," and cites Deut. xi. 2, Ezek. xliii. 7, xlvii. 17-19, ("unless one correct נִי for אֲנִי") Zech. viii. 17. (Lehrb. n. 510. c.)

<sup>12</sup> 1 Sam. xxx. 23, which Ewald compares, Lehrb. n. 329. a p. 811, ed. 8, and in his Die Proph. iii. 183. Only he, not very intelligibly, makes it a sort of oath, By the word, By that which the Lord hath given us. But he suggests the like broken sentence Zech. vii. 7.

' ver. 21. Heb. 12. 26. s Joel 3. 16.

that all good, all wisdom, from least to greatest, comes from God the Holy Ghost; though one by one they would exclude more truth than they each contain.

6. Yet once, it is a little while. This, the rendering of S. Paul to the Hebrews, is alone grammatical<sup>1</sup>. Yet once. By the word yet he looks back to the first great shaking of the moral world, when God's revelation by Moses and to His people broke upon the darkness of the pagan world, to be a monument against heathen error till Christ should come; once looks on, and conveys that God would again shake the world, but once only, under the one dispensation of the Gospel, which should endure to the end.

It is a little while. "The 517 years, which were to elapse to the birth of Christ, are called a little time, because to the prophets, ascending in heart to God and the eternity of God, all times, like all things of this world, seem, as they are, only a little thing, yea a mere point;" which has neither length nor breadth. So S. John calls the time of the new law, the last hour; <sup>3</sup> Little children, it is the last hour. It was little also in respect to the time, which had elapsed from the fall of Adam, upon which God promised the Saviour Christ<sup>4</sup>; little also in respect to the Christian law, which has now lasted above 1800 years, and the time of the end does not seem yet nigh.

I will shake the heavens and the earth, and the sea and the dry land. It is one universal shaking of all this our world and the heavens over it, of which the Prophet speaks. He does not speak only of <sup>5</sup> signs in the sun and in the moon and in the stars, which might be, and yet the frame of the world itself might remain. It is a shaking, such as would involve the dissolution of this our system, as St. Paul draws out its meaning; <sup>6</sup> This word, once more, signifieth the removing of the things that are shaken, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. Prophecy, in its long perspective, uses a continual foreshortening, speaking of things in relation to their eternal meaning and significance, as to that which shall survive, when heaven and earth and even time shall have passed away. It blends together the beginning and the earthly end; the preparation and the result; the commencement of redemption and its completion; our Lord's coming in humility and in His Majesty. Scarce any prophet but exhibits things in their intrinsic relation, of which time is but an accident. It is the rule, not the exception. The Seed of the woman, Who should bruise the serpent's head, was promised on the fall; to Abraham, the blessing through his seed; by Moses, the prophet like unto him; to David, an everlasting covenant<sup>7</sup>. Joel unites the outpouring of the Spirit of God on the Day of Pentecost, and the hatred of the world till the Day of Judgement<sup>8</sup>; Isaiah, God's judgements on the land and the Day of final judgement<sup>9</sup>; the deliverance from Babylon, and the first coming of Christ<sup>10</sup>; the glories of the Church, the new heavens and the new earth which shall remain for ever, and the unquenched fire and undying worm of the lost<sup>11</sup>; Daniel, the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes, of Anti-Christ, and the Resurrection<sup>12</sup>; Obadiah, the punishment of Edom and the everlasting kingdom of God<sup>13</sup>; Zephaniah, the punishment of Judah and the final judgement of the earth<sup>14</sup>; Malachi, our Lord's first and second Coming<sup>15</sup>.

Nay, our Lord Himself so blends together the destruction of Jerusalem and the days of Anti-Christ and the end of the world, that it is difficult to separate them, so as to say what belongs exclusively to either<sup>16</sup>. The prophecy is an answer to two distinct questions of the Apostles, 1) When shall these things (viz. the destruction of the temple) be? 2) and what shall be the sign of Thy coming and of the end of the world? Our Lord answers the two questions in one. Some things seem to belong to the first Coming, as <sup>17</sup> the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel, and the flight from <sup>18</sup> Judæa into the mountains. But the exceeding deceivableness is authoritatively interpreted by St. Paul<sup>19</sup> of a distant time; and our Lord Himself, having said that all these things, of which the Apostles had enquired, should take place in that generation<sup>20</sup>, speaks of His absence as of a man taking a far journey<sup>21</sup>, and says that not the angels in heaven knew that hour, neither the Son<sup>22</sup>; which precludes the idea, that He had just before declared that the whole would take place in that generation. For this would be to make out, that He declared that the Son knew not the hour of His Coming, which He had just (on this supposition) declared to be in that generation.

So then, here. There was a general shaking upon earth before our Lord came. Empires rose and fell. The Persian fell before Alexander's; Alexander's world-empire was ended by his sudden death in youth; of his four successors, two only continued, and they too fell before the Romans; then were the Roman civil wars, until, under Augustus, the temple of Janus was shut. "For it greatly beseeemed a work ordered by God, that many kingdoms should be confederated in one empire, and that the universal preaching might find the peoples easily accessible who were held under the rule of one state." In the Heavens was the star, which led the wise men, the manifestation of Angels to the shepherds; the preternatural darkness at the Passion; the Ascension into the highest Heaven, and the descent of the Holy Ghost with <sup>24</sup> a sound from heaven as [of] a rushing mighty wind. "God had moved them [heaven and earth] before, when He delivered the people from Egypt, when there was in heaven a column of fire, dry ground amid the waves, a wall in the sea, a path in the waters, in the wilderness there was multiplied a daily harvest of heavenly food [the manna], the rock gushed into fountains of waters. But He moved it afterwards also in the Passion of the Lord Jesus, when the heaven was darkened, the sun shrank back, the rocks were rent, the graves opened, the dead were raised, the dragon, conquered in his waters, saw the fishers of men, not only sailing in the sea, but also walking without peril. The dry ground also was moved, when the unfruitful people of the nations began to ripen to a harvest of devotion and

<sup>14</sup> The second question about the end of the world occurs only in S. Matthew (xxiv. 8); the first, When shall these things be? occurs in S. Mark also (xiii. 8) and S. Luke (xxi. 6). The words in S. Mark, This generation shall not pass till all these things be done (xiii. 30) seem to me to be cast in the form of their question, When shall these things be? viz. the things about which they had asked. <sup>15</sup> S. faith,—so that more were the children of the forsaken, than of her which had a husband, and <sup>1</sup> the desert flourished like a lily.” “<sup>2</sup> He moved earth in that great miracle of the birth from the Virgin: He moved the sea and dry land, when in the islands and in the whole world Christ is preached. So we see all nations moved to the faith.”

And yet, whatever preludes of fulfilment there were at our Lord's first Coming, they were as nothing to the fulfilment which we look for in the Second, when <sup>3</sup> the earth shall be utterly broken down; the earth, clean dissolved; the earth, moved exceedingly; the earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a hanging-cot in a vineyard<sup>4</sup>, and the transgression thereof is heavy upon it; and it shall fall and not rise again; whereon follows an announcement of the final judgement of men and angels, and the everlasting kingdom of the blessed in the presence of God.

Of that day of the Lord, St. Peter uses our Lord's image, <sup>5</sup> that it shall <sup>6</sup> come as a thief in the night, in which the heavens shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works therein shall be burned up.

7. And the desire of all nations shall come. The words can only mean this, the central longing of all nations<sup>7</sup>; He whom they longed for, either through the knowledge of Him spread by the Jews in their dispersion, or mutely by the aching craving of the human heart, longing for the restoration from its decay. The earnest expectation of the creature did not begin with the Coming of Christ, nor was it limited to those, who actually came to Him. <sup>8</sup> The whole creation, Saint Paul saith, groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. It was enslaved, and the better self longed to be free; every motion of grace in the multitudinous heart of man was a longing for its Deliverer; every weariness of what it was, every fleeting vision of what was better, every sigh from out of its manifold ills, were notes of the one varied cry, “Come and help us.” Man's heart, formed in the image of God, could not but ache to be re-formed by and for Him, though an unknown God, Who should reform it.

This longing increased as the time drew nigh, when Christ

discovered and so better placed<sup>1</sup>," or our own of the "pale and common drudge "Tween man and man," a Hebrew prophet could recognise gold and silver as the desire of all nations. R. Akiba and S. Jerome's Jewish teachers, after our Lord came, felt no difficulty in understanding it of a person. We cannot in English express the delicacy of the phrase, whereby manifoldness is combined in unity, the Object of desire containing in itself many objects of desire. To render "the desire of all nations" or "the desires of all nations" alike fail to do this. A great heathen master of language said to his wife, "fare you well, my longings<sup>2</sup>," i. e., I suppose, if he had analysed his feelings, he meant that she manifoldly met the longings of his heart; she had in herself manifold gifts to content them. So St. Paul sums up all the truths and gifts of the Gospel, all which God shadowed out in the law and had given us in Christ, under the name of "the good things to come." A pious modern writer<sup>3</sup> speaks of "the unseen desirables of the spiritual world." A psalmist expresses at once the collective, "God's Word" and the "words" contained in it, by an idiom like Haggai's, joining the feminine singular as a collective with the plural verb; <sup>4</sup>How sweet are Thy word unto my taste lit. palate. It is God's word, at once collectively and individually, which was to the Psalmist so sweet. What was true of the whole, was true, one by one, of each part; what was true of each part, was true of the whole. So here, the object of this longing was manifold, but met in one, was concentrated in One, <sup>5</sup>in Christ Jesus, Who of God is made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption. That which the whole world sighed and mourned for, knowingly or unknowingly, light to disperse its darkness, liberty from its spiritual slavery, restoration from its degradation, could not come to us without some one, who should impart it to us.

But if Jesus was the longed-for of the nations before He came, by that mute longing of need for that which it wants (as the parched ground thirsteth for the rain<sup>6</sup>) how much more afterwards! So Micah and Isaiah describe many peoples inviting one another, <sup>7</sup>Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths. And in truth He became the desire of the nations, much more than of the Jews; as, St. Paul says<sup>8</sup>, God foretold of old; Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are not a people: by a foolish nation I will anger you. But Esaias is very bold and saith, I was found of them that sought Me not.

So till now and in eternity, <sup>9</sup>"Christ is the longing of all holy souls, who long for nothing else, than to please Him, daily to love Him more, to worship Him better. So S. John longed for Him; Come, Lord Jesus<sup>10</sup>. So Isaiah; <sup>11</sup>The desire of our soul is to Thy Name and to the remembrance of Thee: with my soul have I desired Thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me, will I seek Thee early. So S. Ignatius, <sup>12</sup>"Let fire, cross, troops of wild beasts, dissections, rendings, scattering of bones, mincing of limbs, grindings of the whole body, ill tortures of the devil come upon me, only may I gain Jesus Christ.—I seek Him Who for us died; I long for Him Who for us rose."

<sup>13</sup>"Hungerest thou and desirest food? Long for Jesus! He is the bread and refreshment of Angels. He is manna, containing in Him all sweetness and pleasurable delight. Thirst-

est thou? Long for Jesus! He is the well of living water, refreshing, so that thou shouldest thirst no more. Art thou sick? Go to Jesus. He is the Saviour, the physician, nay, salvation itself. Art thou dying? Sigh for Jesus! He is the resurrection and the life. Art thou perplexed? Come to Jesus! He is the Angel of great counsel. Art thou ignorant and erring? Ask Jesus; He is the way, the truth and the life. Art thou a sinner? Call on Jesus! For He shall save His people from their sins, To this end He came into the world: This is all His fruit, to take away sin. Art thou tempted by pride, gluttony, lust, sloth? Call on Jesus! He is humility, soberness, chastity, love, fervour: He bare our infirmities, and carried, yea still beareth and carrieth, our griefs. Seekest thou beauty? He is fairer than the children of men. Seekest thou wealth? In Him are all treasures, yea in Him the fulness of the Godhead dwelleth. Art thou ambitious of honours? Glory and riches are in His house. He is the King of glory. Seekest thou a friend? He hath the greatest love for thee, Who for love of thee came down from heaven, toiled, endured the Sweat of Blood, the Cross and Death; He prayed for thee by name in the garden, and poured forth tears of Blood! Seekest thou wisdom? He is the Eternal and Uncreated Wisdom of the Father! Wishest thou for consolation and joy? He is the sweetness of souls, the joy and jubilee of Angels. Wishest thou for righteousness and holiness? He is the Holy of holies; He is everlasting Righteousness, justifying and sanctifying all who believe and hope in Him. Wishest thou for a blissful life? He is life eternal, the bliss of the saints. Long then for Him, love Him, sigh for Him! In Him thou wilt find all good; out of Him, all evil, all misery. Say then with S. Francis, 'My Jesus, my love and my all!' O Good Jesus, burst the cataract of Thy love, that its streams, yea seas, may flow down upon us, yea, inebriate and overwhelm us."

And I will fill this house with glory. The glory then was not to be anything, which came from man, but directly from God. It was the received expression of God's manifestation of Himself in the tabernacle<sup>14</sup>, in Solomon's temple<sup>15</sup>, and of the ideal temple<sup>16</sup> which Ezekiel saw, after the likeness of that of Solomon, that the glory of the Lord filled the house. When then of this second temple God uses the self-same words, that He will fill it with glory, with what other glory should He fill it than His own? In the history it is said, the glory of the Lord filled the temple; for there man relates what God did. Here it is God Himself Who speaks; so He says not, the glory of the Lord, but, I will fill the house with glory, glory which was His to give, which came from Himself. To interpret that glory of anything material, is to do violence to language, to force on words of Scripture an unworthy sense, which they refuse to bear.

The gold upon the walls, even had this second temple been adorned like the first, did not fill the temple of Solomon. However richly any building might be overlaid with gold, no one could say that it is filled with it. A building is filled with what it contains; a mint or treasure-house may be filled with gold: the temple of God was filled, we are told, with the glory of the Lord. His creatures bring Him such things as they can offer; they bring <sup>17</sup>gold and incense; they <sup>18</sup>bring presents and offer gifts; they do it, moved by His Spirit, as acceptable to Him. God is nowhere said, Himself to give these offerings to Himself.

8. The silver is Mine, and the gold is Mine. These words, which have occasioned some to think, that God, in speaking of the glory with which He should fill the house, meant our material riches, suggest the contrary. For silver was no ornament of the temple of Solomon. Everything was overlaid with gold. In the tabernacle there were bowls of silver<sup>1</sup>. In Solomon's temple they and all were of gold<sup>2</sup>. Silver, we are expressly told, was nothing accounted of<sup>3</sup> in the days of Solomon: he made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones—for abundance. Rather, as God says by the Psalmist, Every beast of the forest is Mine, so are the cattle upon a thousand hills: I know all the fowls of the mountains, and the wild beasts of the field are Mine. If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: for the world is Mine and the fulness thereof: so here He tells them, that for the glory of His house He needed not gold or silver: for all the wealth of the world is His. They had no ground "to grieve then, that they could not equal the magnificence of Solomon who had abundance of gold and silver." All was God's. He would fill it with divine glory. The Desire of all nations, Christ, should come, and be a glory, to which all created glory is nothing.

"God says really and truly, that the silver and gold is His, which in utmost bounty He created, and in His most just government administers, so that, without His will and dominion, neither can the bad have gold and silver for the punishment of avarice, nor the good for the use of mercy. Its abundance does not inflate the good, nor its want crush them: but the bad, when bestowed, it blinds: when taken away, it tortures."

"It is as if He would say, Think not the temple inglorious, because, may be, it will have no portion of gold or silver, and their splendour. I need not such things. How should I? For Mine is the silver and Mine the gold, saith the Lord Almighty. I seek rather true worshippers: with their brightness will I gild this temple. Let him come who hath right faith, is adorned by graces, gleams with love for Me, is pure in heart, poor in spirit, compassionate and good." "These make the temple, i. e., the Church, glorious and renowned, being glorified by Christ. For they have learned to pray, The glory of the Lord our God be upon us."

<sup>10</sup> ii. 8. So the LXX. "Wherefore great will be the last glory of this house above the first [glory]." In the other case, the order would have probably been, כבוד בית ה' וְכבוד מִזְבֵּחַ ה' Ex. iii. 8. De. ii. 7, iv. 6, 1 Sam. xii. 16, 1 Kgs iii. 9, xx. 13, 28, Jon. i. 12; but, as Köhler observes, this is not quite uniform, as in 2 Chr. i. 10.

<sup>11</sup> This interpretation involves a change in the wording of the argument from this prophecy, as to the time of our Lord's first coming. For thus interpreted, it does not speak of a second house, and so does not, in terms, speak of the material building which was destroyed. R. Isaac made use of this: "a difficulty need not be raised, that he said, 'this house' of the house which is to be built, since of the first house, which in their time was of old waste, he said 'this house' in the words, 'who is left among you, who hath seen this house in its first glory?' and as 'this house' is spoken of the house of the sanctuary which was then desolate, which was passed away, so he saith, 'this house,' of the house which shall be." Chizzuch Emdinah, c. 34. Wagena. p. 292.

<sup>12</sup> In his oration to the Jews, "Our forefathers built this temple to the supreme God after the return from Babylon, yet in size it lacks 60 cubits in height; for so much did the first, which Solomon built, exceed.—But since, by the counsel of God, I now rule, and we have a long peace, and ample funds and large revenues; and chief of all, the Romans, who, so to speak, are lords of all, are our friends and kindly disposed." (Joseph. Ant. xv. 1. 1.) and a little later (n. 3) "exceeding the expenditure of those aforetime, in a way in which no other appears to have adorned the temple." See Hengst. Christ. iii. 257, 258. ed. 2.

of this house shall be greater than the former; for he had already spoken of the present temple, as identical with that before the captivity; "Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory, and how do you see it now?" He had spoken of its first glory. Now he says, in contrast, its later glory should be greater than that of its most glorious times<sup>11</sup>. In this case the question, whether the temple of Herod was a different material building from that of Zerubbabel, falls away. In either case, the contrast is between two things, either the temple in that its former estate, and this its latter estate after the captivity, or the two temples of Solomon and Zerubbabel. There is no room for a third temple. God holds out no vain hopes. To comfort those distressed by the poverty of the house of God which they were building, God promises a glory to this house greater than before. A temple, erected, after this had lain waste above 1800 years, even if Anti-Christ were to come now and to erect a temple at Jerusalem, could be no fulfilment of this prophecy.

In material magnificence the temple of Solomon, built and adorned with all the treasures accumulated by David and enlarged by Solomon, far surpassed all which Herod, amid his attempts to give a material meaning to the prophecy, could do. His attempt shews how the eyes of the Jews were fixed on this prophecy, then when it was about to be fulfilled. While taking pains, through the gradualness of his rebuilding, to preserve the identity of the fabric, he lavished his wealth, to draw off their thoughts from the king, whom the Jews looked for, to himself. The friendship of the Romans who were lords of all, was to replace the all nations, of whom Haggai spoke; he pointed also to the length of peace, the possession of wealth, the greatness of revenues, the surpassing expenditure beyond those before<sup>12</sup>. A small section of Erastians admitted these claims of the murderer of his sons. The Jews generally were not diverted from looking on to Him Who should come. Those five things, the absence whereof they felt, were connected with their atoning worship or God's Presence among them; "the ark with the mercy-seat and the Cherubim, the Urim and Tummim, the fire from heaven, the Shechinah, the Holy Ghost." Material magnificence could not replace spiritual glory. The explanations of the great Jewish authorities<sup>13</sup>,

<sup>14</sup> "Rab and Samuel disputed hereon, or, as others, R. Jochanan and R. Eliezer. The former said, 'it shall be more glorious in structure; the latter, 'in years.' "Baba bathra c. l. f. 80. R. Asariah quotes also from the Shir hashshirim Rabba on Cant. ii. 12 and viii. 1, and adds, "We have found that the best interpreters explained this prophecy literally as to the second house." This is followed by Kimchi, Rashbi, A. E., Lipmann (Nizz. n. 260), Manaaseh ben Israel (de term. vitæ) iii. 4. (Hilpert de gloria Templi post. Thea. Theol.-Phil. p. 1086 sqq.) Tanchum. Of the magnificence of the building they allege only that the building was in size equal to that of Solomon, while even in material magnificence it was beyond measure inferior. The relative duration they underrate; "the first, 410 years; the second 420;" for from the xith of Solomon's reign, B. C. 1005, to the burning of the temple in the xith of Zedekiah, were 417 years; but from the vith of Darius when the 2nd temple was finished, B. C. 515, to the burning of the temple under Titus A.D. 70, were 585 years. But mere duration is not glory. R. Isaac says as Abarbanel; "But it is a difficulty in what they say, that Scripture says not, 'great shall be the building of the house,' or, 'the time of the house,' only 'great shall be the glory of the house;' for what that the 2nd house stood ten years more than the 1st, this was not such great glory, that for this the prophet should say what he said: and again though the days during which the 2nd house stood were 100 years more than the duration of the first house, and though in its building it were twofold greater than the first house, how saith Scripture of it on this account, that its glory was greater than the first, since the glory which dwelt in the first house did not dwell in it?" Chizz. Em. l. c. pp. 287, 288. "Wherefore it is rather the true glory which is the abiding of the glory of the Shechinah in this house for ever; which did not abide continually in the first house; but in the second house the glory did not dwell at all; for they had not the ark and the mercy seat and the cherubim, or the Urim and Tummim, nor the Holy Spirit, nor the heavenly fire, nor the anointing oil, as it was in the 1st that the second temple was superior to the first in structure (which was untrue) or in duration, were laid aside by Jews who had any other solution wherewith to satisfy themselves. "The Shechinah and the five precious things," says one<sup>1</sup>, "which, according to our wise of blessed memory, were in it, and not in the second house, raised and exalted it beyond compare." Another<sup>2</sup> says, "When Haggai saith, 'greater shall be the glory of this later house than the first,' how is it, that the house which Zerubbabel built through the income which the king of Persia gave them was more glorious than the house which Solomon built? And though it is said that the building which Herod made, was exceeding beautiful and rich, we should not think that it was in its beauty like to the house which Solomon built. For what the wise of blessed memory have said of the beauty of the house of Herod is in relation to the house which Zerubbabel built. How much more, since Scripture saith not, 'Great shall be the beauty or the wealth of this latter house above the first,' but the glory: and the glory is not the wealth or the beauty, or the largeness of the dimensions of the building, as they said in their interpretations; for the 'glory' is in truth spoken of the glory of God, which filled the tabernacle, after it was set up, and of the glory of God which filled the house of God, which Solomon built, when he brought the ark into the holy of holies, which is the Divine cloud and the Light supreme, which came down thither in the eyes of all the people, and it is said, 'And it was when the priests came out of the holy place, the cloud filled the house of God, and the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud, for the glory of God filled the house of God.' And this glory was not in the second house. And how shall it be said, if so, 'great shall be the glory of this later house above the first'?" The poor unconverted Jew did not know the answer to his question: "Through the Presence of God, in the substance of our flesh; through the Son given to us, Whose name should be Mighty God." The glory of this temple was in Him Who<sup>3</sup> was made Flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. "There Christ, the Son of God, was, as a Child, offered to God: there He sat in the midst of the Doctors; there He taught and revealed things, hidden from the foundation of the world. The glory of the temple of Solomon was, that in it the majesty of God appeared, veiling itself in a cloud: in this, that same Majesty shewed itself, in very deed united with the Flesh, visible to sight: so that Jesus Himself said, He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father. This it was which Malachi sang with joy: The Lord Whom ye seek shall suddenly come to His temple, even the Messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in." And in this place I will give peace. Temporal peace they had now, nor was there any prospect of its being disturbed. They were quiet subjects of the Persian empire, which included also all their former enemies, greater or less. Alex-house." Ib. p. 293. Others made the glory to consist in the absence of idolatry, quoted Ib. p. 286. R. Lipmann Nizz. p. 42, makes it to consist in the uninterruptedness of the worship of God there, whereas the temple was shut by Ahaz and Manasseh [as was the second at least decorated by Antiochus Epiphanes for 8 years. 1 Mac. i. 54, iv. 59.]

<sup>1</sup> R. Asariah de Rossi Imre Bina, c. 51, in Hilpert l. c. n. 8. His own solution is that the glory was not in the temple itself, but in that kings brought presents to it. Ib. 10.

<sup>2</sup> Abarbanel Quæst. iv in Hagg. f. 17r. He says that "the interpreters, all of them explained it of the second house," p. 17r. 2. Abarb. subjoins a criticism, which R. Asariah, Imre-Bina c. 54, saw to be mistaken, that וְיָרָא and וְיָרָא could not be said of two things (of which וְיָרָא and וְיָרָא are, he says, used) against which R. Asariah quotes Jer. l. 17. Gen. xxxiii. 2. Add Ex. iv. 8. Deut. xxiv. 3, 4. Ru. iii. 10, Is. viii. 23. [ix. 1. Eng.]

ander subdued all the bordering countries which did not yield, but spared themselves. Temporal peace then was nothing to be then given them; for they had it. In later times they had it not. The temple itself was profaned by Antiochus Epiphanes. "Her sanctuary was laid waste like a wilderness. As had been her glory, so was her dishonour increased." Again by Pompey<sup>8</sup>, by Crassus<sup>9</sup>, the Parthians<sup>10</sup>, before it was destroyed by Titus and the Romans. Jews saw this and, knowing nothing of the peace in Jesus, argued from the absence of outward peace, that the prophecy was not fulfilled under the second temple. "What Scripture says, 'and in this place I will give peace,' is opposed to their interpretation. For all the days of the duration of the 2nd house were in strait of times and not in peace, as was written in Daniel, and threescore and two weeks: the street shall be built again and the fosse, and in strait of time, and, as I said, in the time of Herod there was no peace whatever, for the sword did not depart from his house to the day of his death; and after his death the hatred among the Jews increased, and the Gentiles straitened them, until they were destroyed from the face of the earth."

But spiritual peace is, throughout prophecy, part of the promise of the Gospel. Christ Himself was to be<sup>12</sup> the Prince of peace: of the increase of His government and of His peace there was to be no end; in His days<sup>13</sup> the mountains were to bring peace to the people; there should be abundance of peace, so long as the moon endureth; the work of righteousness was to be peace<sup>14</sup>; the chastisement of our peace [that which obtained it] was upon Him<sup>15</sup>; great should be the peace of her children<sup>16</sup>; in the Gospel God would give peace, true peace, to the far off and the near<sup>17</sup>; He would extend<sup>18</sup> peace to her like a river: the good things of the Gospel was the publishing of peace<sup>19</sup>. The Gospel is described as<sup>20</sup> a covenant of peace: the promised king<sup>21</sup> shall speak peace to the Heathen; He Himself should be our peace<sup>22</sup>. And when He was born, the angels proclaimed<sup>23</sup> on earth peace, goodwill towards men: The Dayspring from on high visited us, to guide our feet into the way of peace. He Himself says, My peace I leave with you. He spake, that<sup>26</sup> in Me ye might have peace. S. Peter sums up the word which God sent unto the children of Israel, as<sup>27</sup> preaching peace by Jesus Christ: the kingdom of God is joy and peace; Christ is our peace; made peace; preaches peace. God calleth us to peace<sup>30</sup>, in the Gospel: being justified by faith, we have peace with God through Jesus Christ our Lord; the fruit of the Spirit is love joy peace. Spiritual peace being thus prominent in the Gospel and in prophecy, as the gift of God, it were unnatural to explain the peace which God promised here to give, as other than He promised elsewhere; peace in Him Who is our peace, Jesus Christ.

"Peace and tranquillity of mind is above all glory of the house; because peace passeth all understanding. This is peace above peace, which shall be given after the third

10 ¶ In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet saying,

Deut. 33. 10.
Mal. 2. 7.

11 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; <sup>1</sup> Ask now the priests concerning the law saying,

12 If one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? And the priest answered and said, No.

13 Then said Haggai, If one that is <sup>m</sup> unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.

14 Then answered Haggai, and said, <sup>n</sup> So is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the LORD; and so is every work of their hands; and that which they offer there is unclean.

15 And now, I pray you, consider from this day and upward, from before a stone was laid upon a stone in the temple of the LORD:

16 Since those days were, when one came to an heap of twenty measures, there were but ten: when one came to the press-fat for to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty.

17 <sup>a</sup> I smote you with blasting and mildew and with hail in all the labours of your hands; yet ye turned not to me, saith the LORD.

18 Consider now from this day and upward, from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, even from the day that the foundation of the LORD's temple was laid, consider it.

shaking of heaven sea earth, dry land, when He shall destroy all powers and principalities [in the day of judgement].—And so shall there be peace throughout, that, no bodily passions or hindrances of unbelieving mind resisting, Christ shall be all in all, exhibiting the hearts of all subdued to the Father."

11-14. Ask now the priests concerning the law. The priests answer rightly, that, by the law, insulated unholiness spread further than insulated holiness. The flesh of the sacrifice hallowed whatever it should touch<sup>1</sup>, but not further; but the human being, who was defiled by touching a dead body, defiled all he might touch<sup>2</sup>. Haggai does not apply the first part; viz. that the worship on the altar which they reared, while they neglected the building of the temple, did not hallow. The possession of a holy thing does not counterbalance disobedience. Contrariwise, one defilement defiled the whole man and all which he touched, according to that, <sup>3</sup> whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.

In the application, the two melt into one; for the holy thing, viz. the altar which they raised out of fear on their return, so far from hallowing the land or people by the sacrifices offered thereon, was itself defiled. This people and this nation (not "My people") since they in act disowned Him. Whatever they offer there, i. e. on that altar, instead of the temple which God commanded, is unclean, offending Him Who gave all.

15. And now, I pray you. Observe his tenderness, in drawing their attention to it<sup>4</sup>. Consider from this day and upwards. He bids them look backward, from before a stone was laid upon a stone, i. e. from the last moment of their neglect in building the house of God; from since those days were, or from the time backwards when those things were, (resuming, in the word, from-their-being<sup>5</sup>, the date which he had just given, viz. the beginning of their resuming the building backwards, during all those years of neglect) one came to a heap of twenty measures. The precise measure is not mentioned<sup>6</sup>: the force of the appeal lay in the proportion: the heap of corn which, usually, would yield twenty, (whether bushels<sup>7</sup> or seahs<sup>8</sup> or any other measure, for the heap itself being of no defined size, neither could the quantity expected from it be defined) there were ten only; one came to the press-vat to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, or perhaps fifty poorah, i. e. the ordinary quantity drawn out at one time from the press<sup>9</sup>, there were, or it had become, twenty, two fifths only of what they looked for and ordinarily obtained. The dried grapes yielded so little.

17. I smote you with blasting and mildew, two diseases of corn, which Moses had foretold<sup>10</sup> as chastisements on disobedience and God's infliction, of which Amos had spoken in these self-same words<sup>11</sup>. Haggai adds the hail, as destructive of the vines<sup>12</sup>. Yet [And] ye turned you not to Me lit. there were none—you, (accusative<sup>13</sup>) i. e. who turned you unto Me. The words are elliptical, but express the entire absence of conversion, of any who turned to God.

18. From the day that the foundation of the Lord's house. Zechariah, in a passage corresponding to this, uses the same words<sup>14</sup>, the day that the foundation of the house of the Lord of 19 <sup>a</sup> Is the seed yet in the barn? yea, as yet the vine, and the fig tree, and the pomegranate, and the olive tree, hath not brought forth: from this day will I bless you.

20 ¶ And again the word of the Lord hosts was laid, that the temple might be built, not of the first foundation, but of the work as resumed in obedience to the words by the mouth of the prophets, Haggai and himself, which, Ezra also says, was <sup>1</sup> in the second year of Darius. But that work was resumed, not now at the time of this prophecy, but three months before, on the 24th of the sixth month. Since then the word translated here, from<sup>2</sup>, is in no case used of the present time, Haggai gives two dates, the resumption of the work, as marked in these words, and the actual present. He would then say, that even in these last months, since they had begun the work, there were as yet no signs for the better. There was yet no seed in the barn, the harvest having been blighted and the fruit-trees stripped by the hail before the close of the sixth month, when they resumed the work. Yet though there were as yet no signs of change, no earnest that the promise should be fulfilled, God pledges His word, from this day I will bless you.

Thenceforth, from their obedience, God would give them those fruits of the earth, which in His Providence had been, during their negligence, withheld. God, said St. Paul and Barnabas, <sup>3</sup> left not Himself without witness, in that He did good, and gave us rain from heaven and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness.

All the Old and New Testament, the Law, the Prophets and the Psalms, the Apostles and our Lord Himself, bear witness to the Providence of God Who makes His natural laws serve to the moral discipline of His creature, man. The physical theory, which presupposes that God so fixed the laws of His creation, as to leave no room for Himself to vary them, would, if ever so true, only come to this, that Almighty God knowing absolutely (as He must know) the actions of His creatures (in what way soever this is reconcilable with our free-agency, of which we are conscious), framed the laws of His physical creation, so that plenty or famine, healthiness of our cattle or of the fruits of the earth or their sickness, should coincide with the good or evil conduct of man, with his prayers or his neglect of prayer. The reward or chastisement alike come to man, whether they be the result of God's Will, acting apart from any system which He has created, or in it and through it. It is alike His Providential agency, whether He have established any such system with all its minute variations, or whether those variations are the immediate result of His sovereign Will. If He has instituted any physical system, so that the rain, hail, and its proportions, size, destructiveness, should come in a regulated irregularity, as fixed in all eternity as the revolutions of the heavenly bodies or the courses of the comets, then we come only to a more intricate perfection of His creation, that in all eternity He framed those laws in an exact conformity to the perfectly foreseen actions of men good and evil, and to their prayers also: that He, knowing certainly whether the creature, which He has framed to have its bliss in depending on Him, would or would not cry unto Him, framed those physical laws in conformity therewith; so that the supply of what is necessary for our wants or its withholding shall be in all time inworked into the system of our probation. Only, not to keep God out of His own world, we must remember that other truth, that, whether God act in any such system or no, He <sup>4</sup> upholdeth all things by the word of His power by an ever-present working; so that it is He Who at each moment doth what is done, doth and maintains in existence all which He has created, in the exact order and variations of their being. <sup>5</sup> Fire and hail, snow and vapour, stormy wind fulfilling His word, are as immediate results of His Divine Agency, in whatever way it pleaseth Him to act, and are the expression of His Will.

<sup>2</sup> Such use of לָמָּחָה would be inconsistent with any force of לָמָּחָה. It is used of a terminus a quo, distant from the present, and is equivalent to "up to and from." So Jud. xix. 30, "No such deed was seen or done from the day that the children of Israel came up," i. e. looking back to that time and from it. So 2 Sam. vii. 6, "Since the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt," lit. "up to from the day." Add Ex. ix. 18, Deut. iv. 32, ix. 7, 2 Sam. vii. 11, xix. 25, Is. vii. 17, Jer. vii. 7, 25, xxv. 5, xxxii. 81, 1 Chr. xvii. 10, Mal. iii. 7. But there is no ground for thinking that Haggai used the

21. I will shake. Haggai closes by resuming the words of a former prophecy to Zerubbabel and Joshua, which ended in the coming of Christ. Even thus it is plain, that the prophecy does not belong personally to Zerubbabel, but to him and his descendants, chiefly to Christ. There was in Zerubbabel's time no shaking of the heaven or of nations. Darius had indeed to put down an unusual number of rebellions in the first few years after his accession; but, although he magnified himself on occasion of their suppression, they were only so many distinct and unconcerted revolts, each under its own head. All were far away in the distant East, in Babylonia, Susiana, Media, Armenia, Assyria, Hyrcania, Parthia, Sagartia, Margiana, Arachosia<sup>6</sup>. The Persian empire, spread <sup>7</sup> probably over 2,000,000 square miles, or more than half of modern Europe, was not threatened; no foreign enemy assailed it; one impostor only claimed the throne of Darius. This would, if successful, have been, like his own accession, a change of dynasty, affecting nothing externally. But neither were lasting, some were very trifling. Two decisive battles subdued Babylonia: of Media the brief summary is given; "<sup>8</sup> the Medes revolted from Darius, and having revolted were brought back into subjection, defeated in battle." The Susians slew their own pretender, on the approach of the troops of Darius. We have indeed mostly the account only of the victor. But these are only self-glorying records of victories, accomplished in succession, within a few years. Sometimes the satrap of the province put the revolt down at once. At most two battles ended in the crucifixion of the rebel. The Jews, if they heard of them, knew them to be of no account. For the destroyer of the Persian empire was to come from the West<sup>9</sup>; the fourth sovereign was to stir up all against the realm of Grecia<sup>10</sup>, and Darius was but the third. In the same second year of Darius, in which Haggai gave this prophecy, the whole earth was exhibited to Zechariah as <sup>11</sup> sitting still and at rest.

word in any sense, in which it had not been used before him. The only construction consistent with the use of לָמָּחָה elsewhere is, that the terminus ad quem, elsewhere expressed by וְהָיָה, having been expressed by the present וְהָיָה, the distant terminus a quo is, as elsewhere, expressed by לָמָּחָה.

The overthrow prophesied is also universal. It is not one throne only, as of Persia, but the throne, i. e. the sovereigns, of kingdoms ; not a change of dynasty, but a destruction of their strength ; not of a few powers only, but the kingdoms of the heathen ; and that, in detail ; that, in which their chief strength lay, the chariots and horsemen and their riders, and this, man by man, every one by the sword of his brother. This mutual destruction is a feature of the judgements at the end of the world against Gog and Magog<sup>1</sup> ; and of the yet unfulfilled prophecies of Zechariah<sup>2</sup>. Its stretching out so far does not hinder its partial fulfilment in earlier times. Zerubbabel stood, at the return from the captivity, as the representative of the house of David and heir of the promises to him, though in an inferior temporal condition ; thereby the rather shewing that the main import of the prophecy was not temporal. As then Ezekiel prophesied, <sup>3</sup>I will set up One Shepherd over them, and He shall feed them, My servant David ; <sup>4</sup>And David My servant shall be king over them ; and My servant David shall be their prince for ever ; and Jeremiah, <sup>5</sup>They shall serve the Lord their God and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them ; and Hosea, that <sup>6</sup>after many days shall the children of Israel return and seek the Lord their God, and David their king, meaning by David, the great descendant of David, in whom the promises centered, so in his degree, the promise to Zerubbabel reaches on through his descendants to Christ ; that, amid all the overthrow of empires, God would protect his sons' sons until Christ should come, the King of kings and Lord of lords, Whose <sup>7</sup>kingdom shall never be destroyed, but it shall break in pieces and consume all those kingdoms, and shall stand fast for ever.

23. I will make thee as a signet. God reverses to Zerubbabel the sentence on Jeconiah for his impiety. To Jeconiah He had said, <sup>8</sup>though he were the signet upon My right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence ; and I will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life. The signet was very precious to its owner, never parted with, or only to those to whom authority was delegated (as by Pharaoh to Joseph<sup>9</sup>, or by Ahasuerus to Haman<sup>10</sup> and then to Mordecai<sup>11</sup>) ; through it his will was expressed. Hence the spouse in the Canticles says, <sup>12</sup>Set me, as a seal upon thy heart, as a seal upon thy arm. The signet also was an ornament to him who wore it. God is glorified in His saints<sup>13</sup> ; by Zerubbabel in the building of His house. He gave him estimation with Cyrus, who entrusted him with the return of his people, and made him (who would have been the successor to the throne of Judah, had the throne been re-established) his governor over the restored people. God promises to him and his descendants protection amid all shaking of empires. <sup>14</sup>He was a type of Christ in bringing back the people from Babylon, as Christ delivered us from sin death and hell : he built the temple, as Christ built the Church ; he protected his people against the Samaritans who would hinder the building, as Christ protects His Church : he was dear and joined to God, as Christ was united to Him, and hypostatically united and joined His Humanity to the Word. The true Zerubbabel then, i. e. Christ, the son and antitype of Zerubbabel, is the signet in the hand of the Father, both passively and actively, whereby God impresses His own Majesty thoughts and words and His own Image on men angels and all creatures." <sup>15</sup>The Son is the Image of God the Father, having His entire and exact likeness, and in His own beauty beaming forth the nature of the Father. In Him too God seals us also to His own likeness, since, being conformed to Christ, we gain the image of God." <sup>16</sup>Christ, as the Apostle says, is the Image of the invisible God, the brightness of His Glory and the express Image of His Person, Who, as the Word and Seal and express Image, seals it on others. Christ is here called a signet, as Man not as God. For it was His Manhood which He took of the flesh and race of Zerubbabel. He is then, in His Manhood, the signet of God ; 1) as being hypostatically united with the Son of God ; 2) because the Word impressed on His Humanity the likeness of Himself, His knowledge, virtue, holiness, thoughts, words, acts and conversation ; 3) because the Man Christ was the seal, i. e. the most evident sign and witness of the attributes of God, His power, justice, wisdom, and especially His exceeding love for man. For, that God might shew this, He willed that His Son should be Incarnate. Christ thus Incarnate is as a seal, in which we see expressed and depicted the love power justice wisdom &c. of God ; 4) because Christ as a seal, attested and certified to us the will of God, His doctrine law commands, i. e. those which He promulgated and taught in the Gospel. No one, St. John saith, <sup>17</sup>hath seen God at any time : the Only-Begotten Son Who is the Image of the Father, He hath declared Him. Hence God gave to Christ the power of working miracles, that He might confirm His words as by a seal, and demonstrate that they were revealed and enjoined to Him by God, as it is in St. John, <sup>18</sup>Him hath God the Father sealed." <sup>19</sup>Christ is also the seal of God, because by His impress, i. e. the faith grace virtue and conversation from Him and by the impress in Baptism and the other Sacraments, He willed to conform us to the Image of His Son<sup>20</sup>, that, <sup>21</sup>as we have borne the image of the earthly Adam, we may also bear the image of the Heavenly. Then, Christ, like a seal, seals and guards His faithful against all temptations and enemies. The seal of Christ is the Cross, according to that of Ezekiel, <sup>22</sup>Seal a mark upon the foreheads of the men who sigh, and in the Revelation, <sup>23</sup>I saw another Angel having the seal of the living God. For the Cross guardeth us against the temptations of the flesh, the world and the devil, and makes us followers, soldiers, and martyrs of Christ crucified. Whence the Apostle says, <sup>24</sup>I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus."

says even a Jewish controversialist<sup>1</sup>, "who shall be of the seed of Zerubbabel; and therefore this promise was not fulfilled at all in himself: for at the time of this prophecy he had aforetime been governor of Judah, and afterwards he did not rise to any higher dignity than what he was up to that day: and in like way we find that God said to Abraham our father in the covenant between the pieces,<sup>2</sup> I am the Lord who brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees to give thee this land to inherit it, and beyond doubt this covenant was confirmed of God to the seed of Abraham, as He Himself explained it there afterwards, when He said, In that day God made a covenant with Abraham, saying, To thy seed have I given this land &c., and many like these."

Abarbanel had laid down the right principles, though of necessity misapplied. "<sup>3</sup>Zerubbabel did not reign in Jerusalem and did not rule in it, neither he nor any man of his seed; but forthwith after the building of the house, he returned to Babylon and died there in his captivity, and how saith he, 'In that day I will take thee?' For after the fall of the kingdom of Persia Zerubbabel is not known for any greatness, and his name is not mentioned in the world. Where then will be the meaning of 'And I will place thee as a signet, for thee have I chosen?' For the signet is as the seal-ring which a man putteth on his hand, it departeth not from it, night or day. And when was this fulfilled in Zerubbabel? But the true meaning, in my opinion, is, that God shewed Zerubbabel that this very second house would not abide; for after him should come another captivity, and of this he says, 'I shake the heaven &c.,' and afterwards, after a long time, will God take His vengeance of these nations 'which have devoured Jacob and laid waste his dwelling place;' and so He says 'I will overthrow the thrones &c.,' and He sheweth him further that the king who shall rule over Israel at the time of the redemption is the Messiah of the seed of Zerubbabel and of the house of David; and God saw good to shew him all this to comfort him and to speak to his heart; and it is as if he said to him, 'It is true that thou shalt not reign in the time of the second temple, nor any of thy seed, but in that day when God shall overthrow the throne of the kingdoms of the nations, when He gathereth His people Israel and redeemeth them, then shalt thou reign over My people; for of thy seed shall he be who ruleth from Israel at that time for ever, and therefore he saith, 'I will take thee, O Zerubbabel &c.,' for because the Messiah was to be of his seed he saith, that he will take him; and this is as he says, "And David My servant shall be a prince to them for ever;" for the very Messiah, he shall be David, he shall be Zerubbabel, because he shall be a scion going forth out of their hewn trunk<sup>4</sup>."

For I have chosen thee. God's forecoming love is the ground of all the acceptableness of His creatures. "We love Him, because He first loved us." Zerubbabel was a devoted servant of God. God acknowledges his faithfulness. Only, the beginning of all was with God. God speaks of the nearness to Himself which He had given him. But in two words<sup>5</sup> He cuts off all possible boastfulness of His creature. Zerubbabel was all this, not of himself, but because God had chosen him. Even the Sacred Manhood of our Lord (it is acknowledged as a theological Truth) was not chosen for any foreseen merits, but for the great love, with which God the Father chose It, and God the Son willed to be in such wise incarnate, and God the Holy Ghost willed that that Holy Thing should be conceived of Him. So God says of Him, "Behold My Servant whom I uphold, Mine elect in whom My soul delighteth;" and God bare witness to Him, "This is My Beloved Son in Whom I am well pleased."

ZECHARIAH.

ZECHARIAH entered on his prophetic office, two months after Haggai's first prophecy. He was still a youth, when God called him<sup>a</sup>, and so, since in the second year of Darius Hystaspis 18 years had elapsed from the first of Cyrus, he must have been brought in infancy from Babylon. His father Berechiah probably died young, since, in Ezra, the prophet is called after his grandfather, Zechariah the son of Iddo<sup>b</sup>. He succeeded his grandfather in the office of the priests, the chief of the fathers, (of which there were twelve) in the days of Joiakim the son of Joshua, the High priest<sup>c</sup>. Since then, while he prophesied together with Haggai, Joshua was still high priest, and it is Joshua whom he sees in his vision in that same year<sup>d</sup>, he must have entered on his prophetic office before he succeeded to that other dignity. Yet neither is there any reason to think that he ever laid it aside, since we hear not of any prophet, called by God, who did abandon it. Rather, like Jeremiah, he exercised both; called to the priesthood by the birth given to him by God, called to the prophetic office by Divine inspiration.

Like Jeremiah, Zechariah was called in early youth to the prophetic office. The same designation, by which Jeremiah at first excused himself as unfit for the office, is given to Zechariah, youth<sup>e</sup>. The term does not indeed mark any definite age; for Joseph, when he was so designated<sup>f</sup> by the chief butler, was 28<sup>g</sup>; Benjamin and Absalom had sons of their own<sup>h</sup>. They were probably so called as terms of affection, the one by his brother Judah<sup>i</sup>, the other by David his father<sup>k</sup>. But his grandfather Iddo was still in the discharge of his office. The length of his ministry is equally unknown. Two years after his first entrance upon it<sup>l</sup>, when Haggai's office was closed, he was bidden to answer from God those who enquired whether, now that they were freed from the captivity, they should keep the national fasts which they had instituted on occasion of some of the mournful events which had ushered it in. His remaining prophecies bear no date. The belief, that he lived and prophesied to old age, may have a true foundation, though to us unknown. We only know that he survived the high priest, Joshua, since his own accession to his office of head of the priests, in his division, was in the days of Joiakim, the son of Joshua.

His book opens with a very simple touching call to those returned from the captivity, linking himself on to the former prophets, but contrasting the transitoriness of all human things, those who prophesied and those to whom they prophesied, with the abidingness of the word of God. It consists of four parts, differing in outward character, yet with a remarkable unity of purpose and end. All begin with a foreground subsequent to the captivity; all reach on to a further end; the two first to the coming of our Lord; the third from the deliverance of the house then built, during the invasion of Alexander, and from the victories of the Maccabees, to the rejection of the true Shepherd and the curse upon the false; the last, which is connected with the third by its title, reaches from a future repentance for the death of Christ to the final conversion of the Jews and Gentiles.

The outward difference, that the first prophecy is in visions; the second, a response to an enquiry made of him; the two last in free delivery, obviously did not depend upon the prophet. The occasion also of the two first bodies of prophecy involved that they were written in prose. For the imagery was borne on the prophet's mind in visions. The office of the prophet was only to record them and the explanations given to him of parts of them, which could only be done in prose. He was so far like the Apostles, who enquired of our Lord, when in the flesh, the meaning of His parables. There is, as in the later chapters, abundance of imagery; and it may have pleased God to adapt the form of His revelation to the imaginative mind of the young prophet who was to receive it. But the visions are, as the name implies, pictures which the prophet sees, and which he describes. Even a rationalist writer saw this. "Every vision must form a picture, and the description of a vision must have the appearance of being read from a picture. It follows from the nature of the description of a vision, that for the most part it cannot be composed in any elevated language. The simplest prose is the best vehicle for a relation (and such is the description of a vision), and elaborate ornament of language were foreign to it. The beauty, greatness, elevation of a vision, as described, must lie in the conception, or in the symmetry, or wondrous boldness in the grouping of the images. Is the whole groupe, piece by piece, in all its parts, to the most minute shading, faithful and described with the character of truth, the exhibition of the vision in words is perfect."

The four portions were probably of different dates, as they stand in order in the prophet's book, as indeed the second is dated two years later than the first<sup>a</sup>. For in the first part God's people are exhorted to come from Babylon<sup>b</sup>, which command, many in the time of Ezra, obeyed, and doubtless individuals subsequently, when a prosperous polity was restored; in the latter part, Babylon is mentioned no more; only in one place, in the imagery of earlier prophets, the future gathering of God's people is symbolised under the previous deliverance from West and East, Egypt and Assyria<sup>c</sup>.

But they agree in this, that the foreground is no longer, as in the former prophets, deliverance from Babylon. In the first part, the reference to the vision of the four empires in Daniel removes the promise of the Deliverer to the fourth Empire. For the series of visions having closed with the vision of the four chariots, there follows at once the symbolic act of placing the crown or crowns on the head of the high priest and the promise of the Messiah, Who should be king and priest<sup>d</sup>. In the later part the enemies spoken of are in one place the Greeks<sup>e</sup>, subsequent to the protection of the temple under Alexander<sup>f</sup>; in another the final gathering of all nations against Jerusalem<sup>g</sup>, which Joel also places at the end of all things<sup>h</sup>, after the outpouring of the Spirit, as it was outpoured on the day of Pentecost.

In both parts alike, there is no mention of any king or of any earthly ruler; in both, the ruler to come is the Messiah. In both, the division of the two kingdoms is gone. The house of Israel and house of Judah are united, not divided; they had been distinct wholes, now they are in interests as one. Zechariah promises a future to both collectively, as did Jeremiah<sup>i</sup> long after the captivity of Israel, and Ezekiel promised that they should both again be one in the hand of God<sup>j</sup>. The brotherhood between Judah and Israel still existed, after they had weighed the thirty pieces of silver for the Good Shepherd. The captivity, in God's Providence, ended at once the kingdom of Israel and the religious schism, the object of which was to maintain the kingdom. Even before the captivity, "divers of Asher and Manasseh and Zebulun humbled themselves, and came to Jerusalem, to the passover of Hezekiah; nay, a great multitude of the people from Ephraim and Manasseh, Issachar and Zebulun, who had neglected or despised the first invitation", came subsequently. In the great passover of Josiah, we hear<sup>k</sup> of all Judah and Israel that were present. The edict of Cyrus related to the "people of the Lord God of heaven, and was published throughout all his kingdom, which included 'the cities of the Medes, whither Israel had been removed. The sacred history is confined to Jerusalem, whence the Gospel was to go forth; yet even 'the sons of Bethel, the centre of the rival, idolatrous worship, which was among the mountains of Ephraim, were among those of the people of Israel who returned with Zerubbabel. It is inconceivable that, as the material prosperity of Palestine returned, even many of the ten tribes should not have returned to their country. But place was no condition of the unity of the Church. Those who returned recognised the religious oneness of all the twelve tribes, wherever dispersed. At the dedication of the house of God, they 'offered a sin-offering for all Israel, twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel. At that passover were present, not only the children of Israel which had come again out of the captivity, but, "all such as had separated themselves unto them from the defilements of the people of the land, to seek the Lord God of Israel, i. e., Israelites, who had been defiled by the heathen idolatries". The house of David<sup>l</sup> was mentioned; for of his seed according to the flesh Messiah was to be born, but it is his house, not any earthly ruler in it.

In both parts alike, Zechariah connects his prophecies with the former prophets, the fulfilment of whose warnings he impressed upon his people in his opening exhortation to them<sup>m</sup>, and in his answer to the question about keeping the fasts<sup>n</sup> which related to the destruction of the city and temple. In the first part, the title "the Branch" is used as a proper name, recalling the title of the Messiah in Isaiah and Jeremiah, the Branch of the Lord<sup>o</sup>, a righteous Branch<sup>p</sup>, a Branch of righteousness<sup>q</sup>, whom God would raise up to David. The prophecy of the mutual exhortation of peoples and cities to worship at Jerusalem<sup>r</sup> is an echo of those of Isaiah and Micah, prolonging them. The prophecy of the four chariots<sup>s</sup>, the symbol of those world-empires, would be unintelligible without the visions in Daniel which it presupposes. The union of the offices of priest and king in the Messiah is a renewal of the promise through David<sup>t</sup>. In the last chapters, the continuousness of the prophet's diction admits still more of this interweaving of the former prophecies, and these alike from the earlier and later prophets. The censure of Tyre for its boast of its wisdom is a renewal of that of Ezekiel<sup>u</sup>; the prophecy against the Philistine cities, of that of Zephaniah<sup>v</sup>; the remarkable prediction that, when the king should come to Zion, chariots and horses, not of the enemy but of Judah should be cut off, is renewed from Micah<sup>w</sup>; the extent of his peaceful kingdom is from a psalm of Solomon<sup>x</sup>; the loosing of the exile from the pit, and God's rendering double unto them, are in Isaiah<sup>y</sup>. The description of the sifting, in which, two parts having been cut off, even the remaining third should be anew tried and cleansed, is condensed from Ezekiel, so that, shall be cut off, shall expire, correspond to the natural and violent deaths, by famine and by the sword, spoken of in Ezekiel<sup>z</sup>. The words, "I have said, it is My people, and it will say, the Lord my God, are almost verbally from Hosea, I say to not-my-people, thou art My people, and it will say, my God; only omitting the allusion to the significant name of the pro- phet's son. "The first part of xiv. 10, the whole land shall be turned as a plain from Gebah to Rimmon, and Jerusalem shall be exalted, reminds of Isaiah and Ezekiel; the latter part, it shall be inhabited in her place from the tower of Hanael to the king's vineyards, and men shall dwell in it and there shall be no more utter desolation, but Jerusalem shall dwell securely, reminds of Jeremiah, The city shall be built to the Lord from the tower of Hanael unto the gate of the corner; it shall not be plucked up nor thrown down any more. The words, and every one that is left of all the nations shall go up to worship the king, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles, reminds of Isaiah, From new-moon to his new-moon, and from sabbath to his sabbath shall all flesh come to worship before Me, saith the Lord. v. 17-19 are an expansion of Isaiah lx. 12; v. 20 expresses the thought of Ez. xliii. 13: the prophecy, there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord for ever, refers back to Ezekiel.<sup>1</sup> The symbolising of the Gospel by the life-giving waters which should flow forth from Jerusalem, originally in Joel iii. 18, is a miniature of the full picture in Ezekiel.<sup>2</sup> The promise, "I will cut off the names of the idols from the land and they shall be no more remembered," in part verbally agrees with that of Hosea, "And I will remove the names of the Baalim from her mouth, and they shall be no more remembered by their names;" only, since the Baal-worship was destroyed by the captivity, the more general name of idols is substituted.

Equally, in descriptions not prophetic, the symbolising of the wicked by the title of the goats, I punished the goats, is renewed from Ezekiel; I judge between flock and flock, between the rams and the he-goats. The description of the shepherds who destroyed their flocks retains from Jeremiah the characteristic expression, and hold themselves not guilty. The minuteness of the enumeration of their neglects and cruelties is the same (amid differences of the words whereby it is expressed): "the perishing shall he not visit, those astray shall he not seek, and the broken shall he not heal; the sound shall he not nurture, and the flesh of the fat shall he eat and their claws he shall split." In Ezekiel, "Ye eat the fat and clothe you with the wool; the fat ye slay; the flock ye feed not; the diseased have ye not healed; and the broken have ye not bound, and the wandering have ye not sought." The imagery of Obadiah, that Israel should be a flame amidst corn to consume it, is retained; the name of Edom is dropped, for the prophecy relates to a larger gathering of enemies. Zechariah has, "In that day I will make the governors of Judah like a hearth of fire among wood and like a lamp of fire in a sheaf of corn, and they shall eat on the right hand and on the left all nations round about." Obadiah; "The house of Jacob shall be fire and the house of Jacob a flame, and the house of Esau stubble, and it shall kindle on them and shall eat them." Even so slight an expression as the pride of Jordan, as designating the cane-brake around it, is peculiar to Jeremiah.<sup>3</sup>

Zechariah is eminently an Evangelic prophet, as much as Isaiah, and equally in both portions.

The use of different words in unlike subjects is a necessary consequence of that unlikeness. In contrast with that pseudo-criticism, which counts up the unlike words in different chapters of a prophet, the different words used by the same modern poet have been counted.<sup>4</sup> A finer perception will see the correspondence of a style, when the rhythm, subject, words, are different. No one familiar with English poetry could doubt that "the Bard," and "the Elegy in a country Churchyard," however different in subject and style and words, were by the same hand, judging alone from the laboured selection of the epithets, however different. Yet there is not one characteristic word or idiom which occurs in both. But the recurrence of the same or like words or idioms, if unusual elsewhere, is a subordinate indication of sameness of authorship.

They are thus enumerated by the writers who have answered the attacks on the authorship of Zechariah.

"Common to both parts are the idioms, from him who goeth and from him who returneth, which do not occur elsewhere; the whole Jewish people are throughout designated as "the house of Israel and the house of Judah," or "the house of Judah and the house of Joseph," or "Judah Israel and Jerusalem," or "Ephraim and Jerusalem," or "Judah and Ephraim," or "Judah and Israel." There is in both parts the appeal to future knowledge of God's doings to be obtained by experience; in both, internal discord is directly attributed to God, Whose Providence permits it; in both the prophet promises God's gifts of the produce of the earth; in both he bids Jerusalem burst out for joy; in the first, "for lo, God says, I come and will dwell in the midst of thee; in the second, behold thy King cometh unto thee.

The purity of language is alike in both parts of the book. No one Syriasm occurs in the earlier chapters.<sup>5</sup> The prophet, who returned as a child to Judæa, formed his language upon that of the older prophets.

In both there is a certain fulness of language, produced by dwelling on the same thought or word: in both, the whole and its parts are, for emphasis, mentioned together.<sup>6</sup> In

<sup>1</sup> Prof. Stanley Leathes, "The witness of the Old Testament to Christ. Note on the Authorship of Isaiah," (pp. 282, 283,) gives the following summary as to the occurrence of words in poems of Milton and Tennyson: "L'Allegro is a poem of 152 lines: it contains about 450 words; Il Penseroso is a poem of 176 lines, and contains about 578 words; Lycidas is a poem of 198 lines, which are longer than those of either of the other two, most of them being heroics: its words are about 725. It is plain, therefore, that Milton must have used for Il Penseroso 128 words not in L'Allegro, and for Lycidas 275 not in L'Allegro, and 147 not in Il Penseroso.

"But what is much more remarkable, is the fact that there are only about 125 words common to L'Allegro and Il Penseroso; only about 140 common to Lycidas and Il Penseroso; only about 61 common to all three. That is; Milton must have used for Il Penseroso 450 words not in L'Allegro, and for Lycidas 590 not in L'Allegro. He must have used for Lycidas some 585 words not in Il Penseroso, and more than 660 not occurring in both together. Also, there must be in L'Allegro some 325 words not in Il Penseroso, and 315 not in Lycidas; and there must be in Il Penseroso nearly 440 words not in Lycidas.

"Again, Tennyson's Lotos-Eaters contains about 590 words; C'enone has about 720. Thus the latter must contain 130 words not in the former: but a comparison shows that there are only about 230 words common to the two poems. That is, there must be 490 words in C'enone which are not in the Lotos-Eaters, and there must be in the Lotos-Eaters about 360 words not occurring in C'enone; that is,—the shorter poem has 300 words which the longer one does not contain."

both parts, as a consequence of this fulness, there occurs the division of the verse into five sections, contrary to the usual rule of Hebrew parallelism.

This rhythm will appear more vividly in instances<sup>a</sup>;

And he shall sit and rule on his throne;
And he shall be a priest on his throne;

I will smite every horse with astonishment,
And his rider with madness;
And upon the house of Judah I will open my eyes,
And every horse of the nations I will smite with blindness."

With one considerable exception<sup>f</sup>, those who would sever the six last chapters from Zechariah, are now at one in placing them before the captivity. Yet Zechariah here too speaks of the captivity as past. Adopting the imagery of Isaiah, who foretells the delivery from the captivity as an opening of a prison, he says, in the name of God, "By the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." Again, "The Lord of hosts hath visited His flock, the house of Judah. I will have mercy upon them [Judah and Joseph] and they shall be as though I had not cast them off." The mention of the mourning of all the families that remain<sup>g</sup> implies a previous carrying away. Yet more; Zechariah took his imagery of the future restoration of Jerusalem, from its condition in his own time. "It shall be lifted up and inhabited in its place from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate, unto the corner-gate, and from the tower of Hananeel unto the king's winepresses." "The gate of Benjamin" is doubtless "the gate of Ephraim," since the road to Ephraim lay through Benjamin; but the gate of Ephraim existed in Nehemiah's time<sup>h</sup>, yet was not then repaired, as neither was the tower of Hananeel<sup>i</sup>, having been left, doubtless, at the destruction of Jerusalem, being useless for defence, when the wall was broken down. So "at the second invasion the Romans left the three impregnable towers, of Hippicus, Phasaclius, and Mariamne, as monuments of the greatness of the city which they had destroyed. Benjamin's gate, the corner gate, the tower of Hananeel, were still standing; "the king's winepresses" were naturally uninjured, since there was no use in injuring them: but the first gate was destroyed, since not itself, but the place of it is mentioned.

The prophecy of the victory over the Greeks fits in with times when Assyria or Chaldæa were no longer the instruments of God in the chastisement of His people. The notion that the prophet incited the few Hebrew slaves, sold into Greece, to rebel against their masters, is so absurd, that one wonders that any one could have ventured to forge it and put it upon a Hebrew prophet<sup>j</sup>.

Since, moreover, all now, who sever the six last chapters from the preceding, also divide these six into two halves, the evidence that the six chapters are from one author is a separate ground against their theory. Yet not only are they connected by the imagery of the people as the flock of God<sup>k</sup>, whom God committed to the hand of the Good Shepherd<sup>l</sup>, and on their rejecting Him, gave them over to an evil shepherd<sup>m</sup>; but the Good Shepherd is One with God<sup>n</sup>. The poor of the flock, who would hold to the Shepherd, are designated by a corresponding word<sup>o</sup>.

A writer has been at pains to shew that two different conditions of things are foretold in the two prophecies. Granted. The first, we believe, has its foreground in the deliverance during the conquests of Alexander, and under the Maccabees, and leads on to the rejection of the true Shepherd and God's visitation on the false. The later relates to a later repentance and later visitation of God, in part yet future. By what law is a prophet bound down to speak of one future only?

For those who criticise the prophets, resolve all prophecy into mere "anticipation" of what might, or might not be, denying to them all certain knowledge of any future, it is but speaking plainly, when they imagine the author of the three last chapters to have "anticipated" that God would interpose miraculously to deliver Jerusalem, then, when it was destroyed. It would have been in direct contradiction to Jeremiah, who for 39 years in one unbroken dirge predicted the evil which should come upon Jerusalem. The prophecy, had it preceded the destruction of Jerusalem, could not have been earlier than the reign of the wretched Jehoiakim, since the mourning for the death of Josiah is spoken of as a proverbial sorrow of the past. This invented prophet then would have been one of the false prophets, who contradicted Jeremiah, prophesying good, while Jeremiah prophesied evil; who encouraged Zedekiah in his perjury, the punishment whereof Ezekiel solemnly denounced<sup>p</sup>, prophesying his captivity in Babylon as its penalty; he would have been one of those, of whom Jeremiah said, that they spake lies<sup>q</sup> in the name of the Lord. It was not "anticipation" on either side. It was the statement of those who spoke more certainly than we could say, "the sun will rise tomorrow." They were the direct contradictionaries of one another. The false prophets said, "The Lord hath said, Ye shall have peace;" the true, "they have said, Peace, peace, when there is no peace:" the false said, "sword and famine shall not be in the land;" the true, "By sword and famine shall their prophets be consumed;" the false said, "ye shall not serve the king of Babylon;" thus saith the Lord, even so will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, from the neck of all nations within the space of two full years;" the true, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, My servant, and all nations shall serve him, and his son and his son's son." The false said, "I will bring again to this place Jeconiah, with all the captives of Judah, that went into Babylon, for I will break the yoke of the king of Babylon;" the true, "I will cast thee out and the mother that bare thee, into another country, where ye were not born, and there ye shall die. But to the land, whereunto they desire to return, thither they shall not return." The false said; "The vessels of the Lord's house shall now shortly be brought again from Babylon;" the true, "the residue of the vessels that remain in this city, —they shall be carried to Babylon."

If the writer of the three last chapters had lived just before the destruction of Jerusalem in those last reigns, he would have been a political fanatic, one of those who, by encouraging rebellion against Nebuchadnezzar, brought on the destruction of the city, and, in the name of God, told lies against God. "That which is most peculiar in this prophet," says one<sup>d</sup>, "is the uncommon high and pious hope of the deliverance of Jerusalem and Judah, notwithstanding all visible greatest dangers and threatenings. At a time when Jeremiah, in the walls of the capital, already despairs of any possibility of a successful resistance to the Chaldees and exhorts to tranquillity, this prophet still looks all these dangers straight in the face with swelling spirit and divine confidence, holds, with unbowed spirit, firm to the like promises of older prophets, as Is. c. 29, and anticipates that, from that very moment when the blind fury of the destroyers would discharge itself on the sanctuary, a wondrous might would crush them in pieces, and that this must be the beginning of the Messianic weal within and without."

Chapter 14 is to this writer a modification of those anticipations. In other words there was a greater human probability, that Jeremiah's prophecies, not his, would be fulfilled: yet he cannot give up his sanguineness, though his hopes had now become fanatic. This writer says on chap. 14, "This piece cannot have been written till somewhat later, when facts made it more and more improbable, that Jerusalem would not any how be conquered, and treated as a conquered city by coarse foes. Yet then too this prophet could not yet part with the anticipations of older prophets and those which he had himself at an earlier time expressed: so boldly, amid the most visible danger, he holds firm to the old anticipation, after that the great deliverance of Jerusalem in Sennacherib's time (Is. c. 37.) appeared to justify the most fanatic hopes for the future. (comp. Ps. 59) And so now the prospect moulds itself to him thus, as if Jerusalem must indeed actually endure the horrors of the conquest, but that then, when the work of the conquerors was half-completed, the great deliverance, already suggested in that former piece, would come, and so the Sanctuary would, notwithstanding, be wonderfully preserved, the better Messianic time would notwithstanding still so come."

It must be a marvellous fascination, which the old prophets exercise over the human mind, that one who can so write should trouble himself about them. It is such an intense paradox, that the writing of one convicted by the event of uttering falsehood in the name of God, incorrigible even by the thickening tokens of God's displeasure, should have been inserted among the Hebrew prophets, in times not far removed from those whose events convicted him, that one wonders that any one should have invented it, still more that any should have believed in it. Great indeed is "the credulity of the incredulous."

And yet this paradox is essential to the theories of the modern school which would place these chapters before the captivity. English writers, who thought themselves compelled to ascribe these chapters to Jeremiah, had an escape, because they did not bind down prophecy to immediate events. Newcome's criticism was the conjectural criticism of his day; i. e. bad, cutting knots instead of loosing them. But his faith, that God's word is true, was entire. Since the prophecy, placed at the time where he placed it, had no immediate fulfilment, he supposed it, in common with those who believe it to have been written by Zechariah, to relate to a later period. That German school, with whom it is an axiom, "that all definite prophecy relates to an immediate future," had no choice but to place it just before the destruction of the temple by the Chaldees, or its profanation by Antiochus Epiphanes; and those who placed it before the Captivity, had no choice, except to believe, that it related to events, by which it was falsified.

Nearly half a century has passed, since a leading writer of this school said, "One must own, that the division of opinions as to the real author of this section and his time, as also the attempts to appropriate single oracles of this portion to different periods, leave the result of criticism simply negative; whereas on the other hand, the view itself, since it is not yet carried through exegetically, lacks the completion of its proof. It is not till criticism becomes positive, and evidences its truth in the explanation of details, that it attains its completion; which is not, in truth, always possible." Hitzig did what he could, "to help to promote the attainment of this end according to his ability." But although the more popular theory has of late been that these chapters are to be placed before the captivity, the one portion somewhere in the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, or Hezekiah; the other, as marked in the chapters themselves, after the death of Josiah, there have not been wanting critics of equal repute, who place them in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes. Yet criticism which reels to and fro in a period of near 500 years, from the earliest of the prophets to a period, a century after Malachi, and this on historical and philological grounds, certainly has come to no definite basis, either as to history or philology. Rather, it has enslaved both to preconceived opinions; and at last, as late a result as any has been, after this weary round, to go back to where it started from, and to suppose these chapters to have been written by the prophet whose name they bear<sup>e</sup>.

It is obvious that there must be some mistake either in the tests applied, or in their application, which admits of a variation of at least 450 years from somewhere in the reign of Uzziah (say B.C. 770) to "later than B. C. 330."

Philological and historical criticism, bearing on events (as it is assumed) of the day, which should, in its variations, oscillate between the reign of John or of Charles I, or (to bring it nearer to ourselves) the first half of the xivth century or the latter part of the xviiith, would not gain much attention. Indeed, it is instructive, that after the philological argument has figured so much in all questions about the date of books

De Wette, Stähelin, Köster, Bürger, were of a different school from Hengstenberg, Havernick, Keil, or again from Jahn and Herbst. Stähelin says, "in the investigation I kept myself free from any influence from without, and first found the facts, which attest the post-exile origin of this section, given by Hengstenberg and de Wette, when I subsequently compared the labours of others, especially those two scholars." of Holy Scripture, it is virtually admitted to be absolutely worthless, except negatively. For, in regard to Zechariah, the argument is not used, except in proof that the same writer cannot have written prose and poetry, which would establish that Hosea did not write either his three first chapters or his nine last; or Ezekiel his inaugural vision, the visions of the ninth and tenth chapters, and the simple exhortations to repentance in his eighteenth and thirty-third. Only I know not on the same evidence, how, of modern writers, Scott and Southey could be supposed to have written their prose and their poetry. How easy it would be to prove that the author of Thalaba did not write the life of Wesley or the history of the peninsular war, nor Shakespeare Macbeth and any comedy which criticism may yet leave to him; still more that he cannot have written the deep tragic scenes of Hamlet and that of the grave-diggers.

Yet such negations have been practically considered as the domain of the philological neo-criticism. Style is to be evidence that the same prophet did not write certain prophecies; but, this being demonstrated, it is to yield no evidence, whether he wrote, when Hebrew was a dead language or in the time of its richest beauty. Individuals indeed have their opinions; but philological criticism, as a whole, or as relates to any acknowledged result, is altogether at fault. Having done its office of establishing, that, in the mind of the critic and his disciples, certain chapters are not Zechariah's, the witness is forthwith dismissed, as incompetent even to assist in proving anything besides. The rest is to be established by historical allusions, which are by some adapted to events in the reign of Uzziah, by others to those of the Maccabees: or rather, it being assumed that there is no prophecy, this latter class assumes that the book is to belong to the times of the Maccabees, because one part of it predicts their victories. Those who tell us <sup>a</sup> of the unity of the results of this modern criticism, must have been thinking of the agreement of its negations. As to the positive results, a table will best shew their harmony. Yet the fault is not in the want of an ill-exercised acumen of the critics; their principle, that nothing in the prophets can relate to any distant future, even though that future exactly realized the words, is the mainspring of their confusions. Since the words of Zechariah do relate to, and find their fulfilment in, events widely separated from each other, and the theory of the critics requires that they should belong to some proximate event, either in the present or some near future, they have to wrest those words from the events to which they relate, some in this way, some in that; and the most natural interpretations are those which are least admitted. Certainly since the descriptions in c. ix. suit with the wars of Alexander and the Maccabees, no one, but for some strong antecedent exigency, would assume that they related to some expected expedition of an Assyrian monarch, <sup>b</sup> which may be conjectured as very probable, but which, for want of historical data, cannot be indicated more circumstantially, or to <sup>c</sup> "a plan of the Assyrians which was not then carried out," or <sup>d</sup> Uzziah's war with the Philistines<sup>e</sup>, and some imagined <sup>f</sup> "attitude of Jeroboam II against Damascus and Hamath," or <sup>g</sup> "a concealed denunciation against Persia," against which Zechariah did not wish to prophesy openly, or to have had no special meaning at all<sup>h</sup>.

It is marvellous, on what slight data this modern school has satisfied itself that these chapters were written before the captivity. To take the statement of an epitomator<sup>i</sup> of German pseudo-criticism: "Damascus, Tyre, and Sidon, Philistia, Javan (ix. 1, 6-12) Assyria and Egypt (x. 10.) are the enemies of Judah." "The historical stand-point is different from that of Zech. i-viii." Of all these, Javan, the Greeks, alone are spoken of as enemies of Judah, who before the captivity were known only as purchasers of Hebrew captives; the only known wars are those of the Maccabees.

"The two kingdoms of Judah and Israel still exist. Surely the language, 'that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel,' implies that both kingdoms existed as part of the covenant nation."

Zechariah speaks of Judah and Israel, but not as kingdoms. Before the captivity, except during the effects of the inter-marriage with Athaliah, there was not brotherhood but enmity. In the reigns of Amaziah and Ahaz there was war.

"The house of David is spoken of xiii. 1." The house, not the kingdom. The house existed after the captivity. Zerubbabel, whom the Persians made governor, was its representative.

"Idols and false prophets (x. 2. xiii. 2 &c.) harmonise only with a time prior to the exile."

Idolatry certainly was not the prevailing national sin, after God had taught the people through the captivity. It is commonly taken for granted, that there was none. But where is the proof? Malachi would hardly have laid the stress on 'marrying the daughters of a strange god', had there been no danger that the marriage would lead to idolatry. <sup>k</sup> Nehemiah speaks of the sin, into which Solomon was seduced by "outlandish women," as likely to recur through the heathen marriages; but idolatry was that sin. Half of the children could only speak the language of their mothers<sup>l</sup>. It were strange, if they had not imbibed their mothers' idolatry too. In a battle in the Maccabee war, it is related <sup>m</sup> "under the coats of every one that was slain they found things consecrated to the idols of the Jamnites, which is forbidden the Jews by their law."

The Teraphim were, moreover, an unlawful and forbidden means of attempting to know the future, not any coarse form of idolatry<sup>n</sup>; much as people now, who more or less earnestly have their fortunes told, would be surprised at being called idolaters. But Zechariah was probably speaking of sins which had brought on the captivity, not of his own day. The prediction repeated from an older prophet, that in the true Judah, the Church, God would cut off even the names and the memory of idols, does not imply that they existed<sup>o</sup>.

False prophets continued after the captivity. Shemaiah, who uttered a prophecy against Nehemiah, the prophetess Noadiah, and the rest of the prophets, are known to us from Nehemiah's relation<sup>p</sup>. Such there were before our Lord came, of whom He said, that they <sup>q</sup> were thieves and robbers: He warned against them, <sup>r</sup> as coming in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves; He foretold that <sup>s</sup> many false prophets shall arise and deceive many; the Acts tell us of the false prophet<sup>t</sup>, a Jew, Bar-jesus; and Theudas, and Judas of

Zechariah had already implied that they had no king then, for he had bidden Zion to rejoice that her king would come to her; accordingly she had none. In xi. 6, God says, "I will no more pity the land; I will deliver man, every one into the hand of his king." It is an event, not of the prophet's time, but of the future; in xiii. 7, there is no mention of any king at all.

Such being the entire absence of proof that these chapters were written before the captivity<sup>d</sup>, the proof that c. xi. relates to the time of Menahem is even absurd. The process with those who maintained this, has been, assuming as proved, that it was written before the captivity, and that it contained no prophecy of the future, to ask, to what period before the captivity does it relate? One verse<sup>e</sup> relates to civil confusion, such as is foretold also, with the same metaphor, by Isaiah and Jeremiah. The choice was large, since the kingdom of Israel had the curse of discord and irreligion entailed upon it, and no king ventured to cut off the entail by cutting off the central sin, the worship of the calves, which were to consolidate it by a worship, the rival of that at Jerusalem. Of the 18 kings between Jeroboam and Hosea, 9, including Tibni, died violent deaths. The choice was directed to Menahem, because of the words in Zechariah, three shepherds also I cut off in one month, and Shallum murdered Zachariah the son of Jeroboam; and he himself, after he had reigned a full month in Samaria, was murdered by Menahem. Here then were two kings cut off. But the third? Imagination is to supply it. One<sup>f</sup> conjectures Menahem; but he reigned 10 years, and so, he invents a meaning for the word, that the prophet does not mean cut off, but denied them, leaving it open whether he meant "removed" or merely "did not acknowledge" them, as Menahem at first certainly found no recognition with the prophetic order (2 Kgs xv. 16, 19);<sup>g</sup> another<sup>h</sup> imagined "some third rival of Zachariah and Shallum, of whom there is no mention in the historical books;" but there is no room for a third king, since Shallum murdered Zachariah; and Menahem, Shallum; another<sup>i</sup> found in Hebrew words<sup>j</sup> which had crept into the LXX, an usurper Kofal-am, of whom he says truly, "we hear nothing;" another<sup>k</sup> conceived of some usurper after the murder of Zachariah or of Shallum (this is left free), who about this time may have set himself at the head of the kingdom, but scarcely maintained himself some weeks; and another<sup>l</sup> says, "This refers probably to the Interregnum 784-773, in which many may have set themselves as kings, but none have maintained themselves." Another<sup>m</sup> "An anti-king may at this time have set himself up in other parts of the kingdom, whom Menahem overthrew as he did that murderer." Others<sup>n</sup> say of the whole, "The symbolical representation, vers. 3 sqq., admits of no detailed explanation, but can be understood only as a whole. It describes the evil condition of Judah under Ahaz." Another<sup>o</sup>, equally certain that it relates to Ahaz, says, "the three shepherds, who perished in one and the same month, were probably men who, in the long anarchy before Hosea ascended the throne, contended for the sceptre."

Yet another is so confident in this interpretation as to the three kings, Shallum Zechariah and Menahem, that, whereas the book of Kings says expressly that Shallum reigned "a full month" lit. "a month of days," the commentator says, "The month cannot have been full"; Zechariah xi. 8 evidently refers to the three Kings, Sachariah, Sallum and Menahem," while others<sup>p</sup> will have it that Zechariah by one month means some indefinite space more than a month. This is indeed required (although not stated) by all these theories, since Shallum alone reigned "a full month," and, consequently, the other two kings (if intended at all by the term "shepherds") must have been cut off at some period, outside of that "one month."

Truly, theory is a very exacting taskmaster, though strangely fascinating. It is to be one of the triumphs of the neo-criticism to distinguish between the authorship of Zech. ix-xi and xii-xiv. The point alleged to prove that c. xi. belongs to the time of Menahem is one at variance with history. It is not that the whole is like, while in one point the likeness is imperfect. It is the point, alleged as the keystone of the whole, which fails. The words of God by the prophet are, "Three shepherds have I cut off in one month." It lies on the surface of the history, that Zachariah, son of Jeroboam, was murdered by Shallum, after reigning 6 months; and that Shallum, after reigning one full month, was himself murdered by Menahem<sup>q</sup>. The succession of murders was not so rapid as when Zimri had murdered Elah, Baasha's son, and after reigning 7 days, committed suicide, lest he should fall into the hands of Omri<sup>r</sup>. Elah and Zimri were cut off in one month; Zachariah and Shallum, in two. But in neither case was there any visible result, except a partial retribution of God's justice. The last executioner of God's justice slept with his fathers; his retribution was after death. He was not cut off. And this is the proof, which is to supplant the testimony to Jesus. The Apostle's words come true, as so often besides: "They shall turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables."

"Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way, yet saidst

The word "Keblaam" was doubtless only the Hebrew words, written by one, who did not know how to translate them, and is variously written and placed as if the scribes did not know what to do with it. Four MSS. make it the name of a place, "in Ieblaam." They are retained in the place of the Hebrew words in the Vat. <sup>h</sup> The original text of the LXX seems to have corresponded with the Hebrew. The meaning of the two Hebrew words, כָּפַל יָמִים, is very simple, "before people" i. e. publicly; כָּפַל יָמִים would (as Böttcher observed, Jen. Lit. Zeit. 1847. p. 1144) have signified "before the people publicly assembled together." The Syro-Hexaplar version by Paul of Tella translates the words, and introduces "Kebdaam" with Origen's asterism, and so, as not belonging to the LXX. The Alexandrian and two other MSS. (one of Constantinople cent. x.) also retain the rendering. The singular "conspired," which excludes "Keblaam" thou not, there is no hope. One should have thought that some must have, at times, thought of the old days, when the prophecy was interpreted of the Good Shepherd and of the 30 pieces of silver which were the price of His Blood, and which were cast into the house of the Lord<sup>a</sup>. But this would have been fatal to "historical criticism," whose province was to find out events of the prophet's own day to fill up the words of prophecy.

The human authorship of any books of Holy Scripture, and so of these chapters of Zechariah is, in itself, a matter which does not concern the soul. It is an untrue imputation, that the date of books of the Bible is converted into matter of faith. In this case Jesus has not set His seal upon it; God the Holy Ghost has not declared it. But, as in other cases, what lay as the foundation of the theory was the unbelief that God, in a way above nature, when it seemed good to Him, revealed a certain future to His creature man. It is the postulate, (or axiom, as appears to these critics), that there is no super-human prophecy, which gives rise to their eagerness, to place these and other prophetic books or portions of books where they can say to themselves that they do not involve such prophecy. To believers it has obviously no religious interest, at what time it pleased Almighty God to send any of His servants the prophets. Not the dates assigned by any of these self-devouring theories, but the grounds alleged in support of those dates, as implying unbelief in God's revelation of Himself, make the question one of religious interest, viz. to shew that these theories are as unsubstantial, as their assumed base is baseless.

It is an infelicity of the modern German mind, that it is acute in observing detailed differences, rather than comprehensive in grasping deeper resemblances. It has been more busied in discovering what is new, than in observing the grounds of what is true. It does not, somehow, acquire the power of balancing evidence, which is habitual to the practical minds of our own countrymen. To take an instance of criticism, apart from Theology, the genuineness of a work of Plato.

<sup>f</sup> "The style of the Laws differs in several important respects from the other dialogues of Plato: 1) in the want of character, power and lively illustration; 2) in the frequency of mannerisms; 3) in the form and rhythm of the sentences; 4) in the use of words. On the other hand, there are many passages 5) which are characterised by a sort of ethical grandeur; and 6) in which perhaps, a greater insight into human nature, and a greater reach of practical wisdom is shewn than in any other of Plato's writings.

"The Laws fall very short of the other Platonic dialogues in the refinements of courtesy. Partly the subject did not properly take the form of dialogue and partly the dramatic vigour of Plato had passed away.—Plato has given the Laws that form which was most suited to his own powers of writing in the decline of life.

"The fictions of the Laws have no longer that verisimilitude, which we find in the Phædrus, and the Timæus or even in the Politicus.—Nor is there any where in the Laws that lively ἐμπόνη, that vivid mise en scène, which is as characteristic of Plato, as of some modern novelists.

"We no longer breathe the atmosphere of humour which pervades the earlier writings of Plato, and which makes the broadest Aristophanic joke as well as the subtlest refinement of wit possible; and hence the impression made upon us is bald and feeble.—The irony of the earlier dialogues, of which some traces occur in the 10th book, is replaced by a sort of severity which hardly condescends to regard human things.

"The figures of speech and illustrations are poor in themselves and are not assisted by the surrounding phraseology. In the Republic and in the earlier dialogues—notes are struck which are repeated from time to time, as in a strain of music. There is none of this subtle art in the Laws.—The citations from the poets have lost that fanciful character, which gave them their charm in the earlier dialogues.

2. "The clumsiness of the dialogue leads to frequent mannerisms.—This finish of style [in the dialogue] is no longer discernible in the Laws. Again and again the speaker is charged or charges himself with obscurity; he repeats again and again that he will explain his views more clearly.—A tendency to a paradoxical form of statement is also observable.—More than in other writings of Plato the tone is hortatory; the Laws are sermons as well as laws; they are supposed to have a religious sanction, and to rest upon a religious sentiment in the mind of the citizens.—Resumptions of subjects which have been half disposed of in a previous passage, constantly occur: the arrangement

"The genuineness of the Laws," says their recent translator<sup>b</sup>, "is sufficiently proved by more than 20 citations of them in the writings of Aristotle [whom Plato designated "the intellect of the school," and who must have been intimate with him for some 17 years<sup>c</sup>] who was residing at Athens during the last years of the life of Plato, and who returned to Athens at the time when he was himself writing his Politics and Constitutions; 2) by the allusion of Isocrates, writing B. C. 346, a year after the death of Plato, and not more than 2 or 3 years after the composition of the Laws—3) by the reference of the comic poet Alexis, a younger contemporary of Plato (B.C. 356.); 4) by the unanimous voice of later antiquity, and the absence of any suspicion among ancient writers worth noticing."

Yet German acuteness has found out reasons, why the treatise should not be Plato's. Those reasons are plausible, as most untrue things are. As put together carefully by one who yet attaches no weight to them, they look like a parody of the arguments, produced by Germans to take to pieces books of Holy Scripture. Mutatis mutandis, they have such an absurdly ludicrous resemblance, that it provokes a smile. Some 50 years ago, there was a tradition at Göttingen, where Heyne had lived, that he attributed the non-reception of the theories as to Homer in England to the English Bishops, who "apprehended that the same principle would be applied to Holy Scripture." Now, for half a century more, both sets of critics have had full scope. The classical sceptics seem to me to have the advantage. Any one, who knew but a little of the uncritical criticism, applied to the sacred books, could imagine, what a jubilee of triumph it would have occasioned, could such differences as those pointed out between "the Laws" and other treatises of Plato, have been pointed out to detach any book of Holy Scripture from its traditional writer. Yet it is held inadequate by one, of whom an admirer said, that "his peculiar mode of criticism cut the very sinews of belief." I insert the criticisms<sup>d</sup>, (omitting the details of illustration) because their failure may open the eyes of some to the utter valuelessness of this sort of

has neither the clearness of art, nor the freedom of nature. Irrelevant remarks are made here and there, or illustrations used which are not properly filled in. The dialogue is generally weak and laboured; and in the later books fairly given up; apparently, because unsuited to the subject of the work.

3. "From this [perfection of style in the Symposium and Phædrus] there are many fallings off in the Laws, first, in the structure of the sentences, which are rhythmical and monotonous;—second, they are often of enormous length, and the latter end frequently appears to forget the beginning of them; they seem never to have received the second thoughts of the author: either the emphasis is wrongly placed, or there is a want of point in the clause, or an absolute case occurs, which is not properly separated from the rest of the sentence; or words are aggregated in a manner, which fails to show their relation to one another; or the connecting particles are omitted at the beginning of sentences; the use of the relative and the antecedent is more indistinct, the changes of number and person more frequent; examples of pleonasm, tautology and periphrasis, unmeaning antitheses of positive and negative, and other affectations, are more numerous than in the other writings of Plato; there is also a more common and sometimes unmeaning use of qualifying formulae—and of double expressions;—again there is an over-curious adjustment of verb and participle, noun and epithet: many forms of affected variety; thirdly, the absence of metaphorical language is remarkable: the style is not devoid of ornament but the ornament is of a debased rhetorical kind, patched on it instead of growing out of the subject; there is a great command of words, and a laboured use of them; forced attempts at metaphor occur in several passages—(compare also the unmeaning extravagance of language in other passages); poor and insipid illustrations are also common: fourthly, we may observe an unmeaning use of climax and hyperbole—

4. "The peculiarities in the use of words, which occur in the Laws, have been collected by Zeller and Stallbaum; first, in the use of nouns, such as" [8 are given]; "secondly, in the use of adjectives, such as" [5 instances] "and of adverbs, such as" [3 instances] "thirdly in the use of verbs such as" [5 instances]—

"Zeller and Stallbaum have also collected forms of words in the Laws differing from the forms of the same words, which occur in other places [7 instances, "and the Ionic word—"]. Zeller has noticed a fondness for substantives ending in μα and οις, such as [9 instances "and others"]; also a use of substantives in the plural, which are commonly found only in the singular [five instances]. Also a peculiar use of prepositions in composition as in [five instances "and others"] also a frequent use of the Ionic datives plural in αἰς and οἰς.

"To these peculiarities he has added a list of peculiar expressions and constructions [9 are given]. He remarks also on the frequent use of the abstract for the concrete criticism. The accuracy of the criticisms is not questioned; the statements are not said to be exaggerated; yet they are held invalid. The question then comes with great force to the conscience; "Why, rejecting arguments so forcible as to a treatise of Plato, do I accept arguments very inferior, as to such or such a book of the Old or New Testament,—certain [11 instances]. He further notes some curious instances of the genitive case—and of the dative—and also some rather uncommon periphrases; also the pleonastic use of the enclitics τις and of ως, of ταύτην, of ὅς, and the periphrastic use of the preposition περὶ. Lastly he observes the tendency to hyperbata or transposition of words; and to rhythmical uniformity as well as grammatical irregularity in the structure of the sentences.

chapters of Isaiah, or Ecclesiastes, or these chapters of Zechariah, or the Epistle to the Hebrews, or the Revelation of S. John the Divine,—except on grounds of theology, not of criticism, and how am I true to myself in rejecting such arguments as to human books, and accepting them as to Divine books?"

"For nearly all the expressions, which are adduced by Zeller against the genuineness of the Laws, Stallbaum finds some sort of authority. There is no reason for suspecting their genuineness, because several words occur in them, which are not found in the other writings of Plato. An imitator will often preserve the usual phraseology of a writer, better than he would himself." From Prof. Jowett's Introduction to the Laws of Plato, T. iv. pp. 11-16.

<sup>a</sup> J. D. Michaelis, 1786, was uncertain. The opinions or doubts in the last century were altogether vague. "I have as yet no certainty, but am seeking: am also not opposed, if any deny these chapters to be Zechariah's." Neue Orient. u. Exeg. Biblioth. i. 128.

Augusti stated attack and defence, but gave no opinion, Einl. 1806. G. L. Bauer (1793) said generally, "c. ix-xiv. seem not to be Zechariah's," but professed himself in utter uncertainty as to the dates. Scholia T. viii. On ix-xiv. he says, "which seems not to be Zechariah's," but whether Plugge was right who thought c. ix. belonged to the time of Jeroboam ii., or Eichhorn, who doubted whether it was not later than Zechariah, he says, "I decide nothing, leaving the whole question uncertain." p. 74. On xi. he says, "we find no indication when the desolation was inflicted," though he would rather understand the Assyrians, than Ant. Epiph. or the Romans. pp. 96, 97. Of xii-xiv. he leaves subject and time uncertain. pp. 109, 119, 121. Doderlein also seems uncertain, Ausert. theol. Biblioth. iv. 2. p. 81. (1787)

belong to B.C. 161, yet one must own that there is not the same evidence for this, as that ix. 1.-x. 17. belongs to the time of Alexander.—These must be the proofs, that the 2nd half of Zechariah cannot have the same author as the first, or one must allow what tradition gives out, and since there are great doubts against it, one must regret that one can come to no clear result as to Zechariah. For the other proofs which could be brought are not decisive." pp. 450, 451.

Corrodi had on the same grounds assigned c. ix. to the time of Alexander; c. xiv. to that of Antiochus Epiphanes. Versuch c. Beleuchtung d. Gesch. d. Jud. u. Christl. Bibel-Canons i. 107.

<sup>6</sup> Ausf. Lehrbuch d. Hebr. Sprache. n. 45. p. 23. 1808. "The way in which Greece is named as a chief enemy of Zion (quite different from that of Joel iv. 6. Is. lxvi. 19.), chiefly shews that the sections Zech. ix. sqq. which resist every assured collocation in the præ-exilic or ante-Macedonian period, could only have been written after Alexander's march through Palestine. With this agree the later colouring, the Levitical spirit, the style full of compilation and of imitation, as also the phantastic messianic hopes. These last must have been revived among the Jews after the overthrow through Alexander. In comparison with the lifeless language of these chapters, as to which we cannot at all understand how any can have removed them into so early præ-exilic times, the Psalms attributed to the times of the Maccabees are amazingly fresh. On this, as well as other grounds, we can admit of no Psalms of the Maccabean times." Neue Aehrenlese ii. 215-127. One ground, which has by others of this school been alleged for not ascribing them to Zechariah, had been that they were so much more poetic &c. "In regard to language also, the style in the second Part is wholly different. c. 9. and 10. are energetic, vivid, &c." Hitzig, Vorbeimerrk. z. d. ii. u. iii. Zech. n. 2. "Rosenmüller says truly:—How much the poetic, weighty, concise, fervid style of the six last chapters differs from the prosaic, languid, humble style of the eight first." Maurer on Zech. ix-xiv. p. 667. "These prophecies [Zech. ix-xiv.] cannot be from Zechariah, not on account of the un-symbolic style (comp. xi. 4-17.) but on account of the more forceful style" &c. Matt. 23. 35.

CHAP. I. 1. In the eighth month<sup>1</sup>. The date joins on Zechariah's prophecy to those of Haggai. Two months before, in the sixth month<sup>2</sup>, had Haggai, conjointly with Zechariah<sup>3</sup>, exhorted Zerubbabel and the people to resume the intermitted building of the temple. These had used such diligence, notwithstanding the partial discouragement of the Persian Government<sup>4</sup>, that God gave them in the seventh month, the magnificent promise of the later glory of the temple through the Coming of Christ<sup>5</sup>. Still as Haggai too warned them, the conversion was not complete. So Zechariah in the eighth, as Haggai in the ninth<sup>6</sup> month, urges upon them the necessity of thorough and inward repentance, as the condition of partaking of those promises.

"<sup>7</sup>Thrice in the course of one saying, he mentions the most holy name of God; partly to instruct in the knowledge of Three Persons in one Nature, partly to confirm their minds more strongly in the hope of the salvation to come."

2. lit. Wroth was the Lord against your fathers with wrath<sup>8</sup>, i. e., a wrath which was indeed such, whose greatness he does not further express, but leaves to their memories to supply. "<sup>9</sup>Seest thou how he scares them, and, setting before the young what befel those before them, drives them to amend, threatening them with the like or more grievous ills, unless they would wisely reject their fathers' ways, esteeming the pleasing of God worthy of all thought and care. He speaks of great wrath. For it indicates no slight displeasure that He allowed the Babylonians to waste all Judah and Samaria, burn the holy places and destroy Jerusalem, remove the elect Israel to a piteous slavery in a foreign land, severed from sacrifices, entering no more the holy court nor offering the thank-offering, or tithes, or first-fruits of the law, but precluded by necessity and fear even from the duty of celebrating his prescribed and dearest festivals. The like we might address to the Jewish people, if we would apply it to the mystery of Christ. For after they had killed the prophets and had crucified the Lord of glory Himself, they were captured and destroyed; their famed temple was levelled, and Hosca's words were fulfilled in them; <sup>10</sup>The children of Israel shall abide many days without a king and without a prince, without a sacrifice and without an image, without an ephod and without teraphim."

3. Therefore say thou. lit. And thou sayest, i. e., this having been so, it follows that thou sayest or must say<sup>11</sup>, Turn

ye unto Me. In some degree they had turned to God, for Whose sake they had returned to their land; and again when, after some negligence<sup>12</sup>, they renewed the building of the temple, and God had said, <sup>13</sup>I am with you. But there needed yet a more inward completer turning, whereon God promises a yet nearer presence, as Malachi repeats the words<sup>14</sup>, and S. James exhorts<sup>15</sup>, Draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh to you. Those who have turned to God need ever to turn more into the centre of the narrow way. As the soul opens itself more to God, God, Whose communication of Himself is ever hindered only by our closing the door of our hearts against Him, enters more into it. <sup>16</sup>If a man love Me, he will keep My words, and My Father will love him, and We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him.

"<sup>7</sup>Men are said to be converted, when leaving behind them deceitful goods, they give their whole mind to God, bestowing no less pains and zeal on Divine things than before on the nothings of life."

"<sup>17</sup>When it is said in Holy Scripture, Turn unto Me and I will turn unto you, we are admonished as to our own freedom; when we answer, Turn us, Lord, unto Thee, and we shall be turned, we confess that we are forecome by the grace of God."

4. Be ye not like your fathers. Strangely infectious is the precedent of ill. Tradition of good, of truth, of faith, is decried; only tradition of ill and error are adhered to. The sin of Jeroboam was held sacred by every king of Israel: <sup>18</sup>The statutes of Omri were diligently kept, and all the works of the house of Ahab. They turned back and were treacherous like their forefathers; they turned themselves like a deceitful bow<sup>19</sup>, is God's summary of the history of Israel. "<sup>9</sup>Absurd are they who follow the ignorances of their fathers, and ever plead inherited custom as an irrefragable defence, though blamed for extremest ills. So idolaters especially, being called to the knowledge of the truth, ever bear in mind the error of their fathers and, embracing their ignorance as an hereditary lot, remain blind."

The former prophets. The prophets spake God's words, as well in their pastoral office as in predicting things to come, in enforcing God's law and in exhorting to repentance, as in announcing the judgements on disobedience. The predictive as well as the pastoral office were united in Nathan<sup>20</sup>, Gad<sup>21</sup>, Shemaiah<sup>22</sup>, Azariah<sup>23</sup>, Hanani<sup>24</sup>, Elijah<sup>25</sup>, Elisha<sup>26</sup>,

9 Then said I, O my lord, what are these? And the angel that talked with me said unto me, I will shew thee what these be.

of God, appearing in form of man, as Daniel says, "<sup>1</sup> The man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, touched me." He is doubtless the same who appeared to Joshua in form of man, preparing thereby for the revelation of God manifest in the flesh—He, before whom Joshua fell on his face and in him worshipped God, through whom also God required the same tokens of reverence as He had from Moses<sup>2</sup>. Joshua lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold there stood a man over against him with a sword drawn in his hand, who said, as Captain of the Lord's host am I come. He rides here, as Leader of the host who follow Him; to Him the others report, and He instructs the Angel who instructs the prophet. Red, being the colour of blood, symbolises doubtless "<sup>3</sup> the vengeance of God to be inflicted on the enemies of the Jews for their sins committed against the Jews," exceeding the measure of chastisement allowed by God. It probably was S. Michael<sup>4</sup>, who is entitled in Daniel, your prince<sup>5</sup>, the great prince which standeth up for the children of thy people<sup>6</sup>.

And he was standing, almost as we say, stationary, abiding in that one place. The description is repeated<sup>7</sup>, apparently as identifying this angel, and so he and the angel of the Lord<sup>8</sup> are probably one.

The myrtle trees<sup>9</sup>, from their fragrance and lowness, probably symbolise the Church, as at once yielding a sweet odour, and in a low estate, or lowly. The natural habits of the myrtle make it the fitter symbol<sup>10</sup>.

And behind him. The relation of the Angel as their chief is represented by their following him. This is consistent with their appearing subsequently as giving report to him. The red and white horses are well-known symbols of war and glory, whence He Who sits on the white horse<sup>11</sup> in the Revelations, went forth conquering and to conquer. The remaining colour is somewhat uncertain. If it be ashen gray, it would correspond to the pale horse<sup>12</sup> of the Revelations, and the union of the two colours, black and white, is calculated to be a symbol of a chequered state of things, whereas a mingled colour like "chestnut" is not suggestive of any symbol.

9. What are these? He asks, not who, but what<sup>13</sup> they import.

<sup>9</sup> The name of the plant, myrtus, occurs in the Arabic of Yemen (Kam. p. 812 and Abulwalid) and is probably the basis of Esther's original name, אֶסְתֵּר, perhaps i. q. Αρωα. Ges.

<sup>10</sup> myrtus, βρύση, in form, is doubtless the same as βρύση, βρύση being used of sinking in the water, Ex. xv. 10. "In profundo," S. Jer. (Virg. Georg. ii. 112, litora myrtetis gratissima, and Ib. iv. 124, amantes litora myrti.) The LXX κατασκίων would rather have been κατασκία, and the myrtles make shade, but do not grow in a shady place, Hitz. Ew. Maur. correct κατασκίων, "the tent," (as Arab. كشك) i. e. "of God," they say. But the tabernacle, while it existed, was not so called; nor did myrtles grow before it. Böttcher n. 641. γ. κατασκίων, "schatten-dach."

The angel that talked with me. lit. "spake in me." The very rare expression<sup>14</sup> seems meant to convey the thought of an inward speaking, whereby the words should be borne directly into the soul, without the intervention of the ordinary outward organs. God says to Moses, <sup>15</sup> If there is a prophet among you, I, the Lord, will make Myself known unto him in a vision, I will speak [lit.] in him in a dream. My servant Moses is not so—In him will I speak mouth to mouth; and Habakkuk says of the like inward teaching, <sup>16</sup> I will watch to see, what He will speak in me. It is the characteristic title of one attendant-angel, who was God's expositor of the visions to Zechariah<sup>17</sup>. "<sup>18</sup> By his ministry God shewed me things to come, in that that angel formed in the spirit and imaginative power of Zechariah phantasms or images of things which were foreshewn him, and gave him to understand what those images signified."

11. And the man answered to the question addressed to the attendant-angel. He himself took the word.

These are they whom the Lord sent to walk up and down. Satan says of himself that he came <sup>19</sup> from going to and fro in the earth and from walking up and down in it. As he for evil, so these for good. Their office was not a specific or passing duty, as when God sent His angels with some special commission, such as those recorded in Holy Scripture. It was a continuous conversation with the affairs of men, a minute course of visiting, inspecting our human deeds and ways, a part of the "<sup>20</sup> wonderful order," in which God has "ordained and constituted the services of Angels and men." Nor is it said that the Angels were limited, each to his own peculiar province, as we learn through Daniel, that certain great Angels, Princes among them, had the charge of empires or nations, even of the heathen<sup>21</sup>. These Angels had apparently only the office of inspecting and reporting to Angels of a higher order, themselves a subordinate order in the heavenly Hierarchy. Nor are they spoken of, as executing any judgements of God, or as pacifying the earth; they may have been so employed; but they are only said to have reported the state in which they found it.

These answered the unexpressed enquiry of the angel of the Lord, as he had answered the unuttered question of the angel, attendant on Zechariah.

<sup>12</sup> Rev. vi. 8, ψαροί, δ; varü, S. Jer., ζαροί Aq. The צָרָה of the Targum is itself uncertain. It is a conjecture only of Levy, that it may be i. q. κατασκίων, "dark-maned." Rashi and Kim. own that they do not know. The Peshito ܕܡܝܬܐ corresponds to the Heb. מית in Gen. xxx. 32. (bis) 33, 35 (bis) 39. but its meaning, in itself, is equally unknown. The Hebrew root occurs besides, only of a choice vine, pl. Is. xvi. 8, סרק Is. v. 2. Jer. iii. 21, סרק Gen. xlix. 11; in Arab. سرك, Abulw. But although this vine, growing only in Syria, has small blue-black grapes (Kim.), it is mere guess that it is so called from its colour, or that سرك signifies red or dark. It is equally a guess that سرك is transposed from Arab. كشك, "chestnut," (as distinct from "bay" كبي) كشك is used of the colour of fire. <sup>13</sup> בא, not בא.

Rev. G. 10.

12 ¶ Then the angel of the LORD answered and said, <sup>m</sup> O LORD of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation <sup>n</sup> these threescore and ten years?

Sitteth still and is at rest, at rest, as the word seems to express<sup>1</sup>, from its wonted state of tumult and war. Wars, although soon to break out again, were in the second year of Darius for the time suspended. The rest, in which the world was, suggests the contrast of the yet continuing unrest allotted to the people of God. Such rest had been promised to Israel, on its return from the captivity<sup>2</sup>, but had not yet been fulfilled. Through the hostility of the Samaritans the building of the temple had been hindered and was just recommenced; the wall of Jerusalem was yet broken down<sup>3</sup>; its fire-burned gates not restored; itself was a waste<sup>4</sup>; its houses unbuilt<sup>5</sup>. This gives occasion to the intercession of the Angel of the Lord.

12. And the Angel of the Lord answered the implied longing, by intercession with God. As the angel-interpreter in Job had "the office of no mere created angel, but one, anticipative of His, Who came at once to redeem and justify," so the Angel of the Lord, in whom God was, exercised at once a mediatorial office with God, typical of our Lord's High Priest's prayer<sup>7</sup>, and acted as God.

These seventy years. The seventy years of the captivity, prophesied by Jeremiah<sup>8</sup>, were on the eve of their conclusion at the time of Daniel's great prayer of intercession<sup>9</sup>; they ended with the capture of Babylon, and the edict of Cyrus, permitting the Jews to return<sup>10</sup>. Yet there seems to have been a secondary fulfilment, from the destruction of the temple and city, in Zedekiah's eleventh year<sup>11</sup>, 588 B.C. to the second year of Darius, 519 B.C. Such double fulfilments of prophecy are not like alternative fulfilments. They are a more intricate and fuller, not an easier fulfilment of it. Yet these 70 years do not necessitate such a double fulfilment. It might express only a reverent wonder, that the 70 years being accomplished, the complete restoration was not yet brought to pass. "God having fixed the time of the captivity to the 70th year, it was necessary to be silent, so long as the time was not yet come to an end, that he might not seem to oppose the Lord's will. But, when the time was now come to a close and the fear of offending was removed, he, knowing that the Lord cannot lie, entreats and ventures to enquire whether His anger has come to an end, as had those who sinned; or whether, fresh sins having accrued, there shall be a further delay, and their forlorn estate shall be yet further extended. They then who worship God have a good and not uncertain hope, that, if they should offend from infirmity, yet have they those who should entreat for them, not men only,

It is used of the rest in Asa's days, 2 Chr. xiii. 23, Heb. given him by God, xiv. 4, 5, of the rest of the city after the death of Athaliah, 2 Kgs xi. 20, 2 Chr. xxiii. 31; of the earth, after the destruction of Babylon, Is. xiv. 7.

but the holy angels themselves, who render God gracious and propitious, soothing His anger by their purity, and in a manner winning the grieved Judge. Then the Angel entreated for the synagogue to the Jews; but we, who believe and have been sanctified in the Spirit, <sup>13</sup> have an Advocate with the Father Jesus Christ the righteous, and He is the propitiation for our sins, and as the Divine Paul writes, <sup>14</sup> God hath set Him forth as a propitiation through faith, freeing from sin those who come to Him."

13. And the Lord answered the angel that talked with me. Either directly, at the intercession of the angel of the Lord, or mediately through an answer first given to him, and by him communicated to the subordinate angel. Neither is expressed.

Good words, as God had promised<sup>15</sup>, after seventy years shall be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you and perform My good word unto you, causing you to return to this place; and Joshua says, <sup>16</sup> There failed not ought of any good word which the Lord spake unto the house of Israel.

Comfortable words, lit. consolations<sup>17</sup>. Perhaps the Angel who received the message had, from their tender compassion for us, whereby they <sup>18</sup> joy over one sinner that repenteth, a part in these consolations which he conveyed.

14. Cry thou. The vision was not for the prophet alone. What he saw and heard, that he was to proclaim to others. The vision, which he now saw alone, was to be the basis and substance of his subsequent preaching<sup>19</sup>, whereby he was to encourage his people to persevere.

I am jealous for Jerusalem, lit. I have been, not now only but in time past even when I did not shew it, and am jealous<sup>20</sup>, with the tender love which allows not what it loves to be injured<sup>21</sup>. The love of God, until finally shut out, is unchangeable. He pursues the sinner with chastisements and scourges in His love, that he may yet be converted and live<sup>22</sup>. But for God's love to him and the solicitations of His grace, while yet impenitent and displeasing Him, he could not turn and please Him.

And for Zion, which especially He had chosen to put His Name there, and there to receive the worship of His people; <sup>23</sup> the hill which God desired to dwell in, <sup>24</sup> which He loved. "With great and special love have I loved the people of the Jews and what pertained to them, and out of that love have I so diligently and severely corrected her excesses, that she may be more careful for the time to come, as a husband corrects most sharply a wife most dear to him, if she be unfaith-

ful. Whence in the book of Maccabees it is written, <sup>1</sup> "It is a token of His great goodness, when wicked doers are not suffered any long time, but are forthwith punished. For not as with other nations, whom the Lord patiently forbearth to punish, till they be come to the fulness of their sins, so dealeth He with us; lest, being come to the height of sin, afterwards He should take vengeance of us. And therefore He never withdraweth His mercy from us, and though He punisheth with adversity, yet doth He never forsake His people."

15. I am sore displeased, lit. with great anger am I angered against the nations which are at ease. The form of the words <sup>2</sup> shews that the greatness of the displeasure of God against those who oppress His people, is proportionate to the great and tender love towards themselves. God had been angered indeed <sup>3</sup> with His people; with their enemies He was angered against a great anger; and that the more, because they were at ease <sup>4</sup>, in unfeeling self-enjoyment amid the miseries of others.

I was a little displeased <sup>5</sup>; little, in comparison with our deserts; little in comparison with the anger of the human instruments of His displeasure; little in comparison with their's who, in their anger, sought their own ends.

They helped forward the affliction <sup>6</sup>. <sup>7</sup> "He is wroth with the nations at ease, because He delivered His people to be corrected, but they used cruelty towards those delivered; He wills them to be amended as a son by a schoolmaster; they set themselves to slay and punish them, as an enemy. Like that in Isaiah, <sup>8</sup> I gave them into thy hands; thou didst shew them no mercy; upon the ancients hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke."

Or it may be, helped for evil, in order to bring about evil, as in Jeremiah <sup>9</sup>, Behold I set My face against you for evil <sup>10</sup>, and to destroy all Judah i. e., as we should say, they were the instruments of God, <sup>11</sup> "cooperated in the execution of My justice towards you, but cruelly and with perverse intention. For although the Assyrians and Chaldeans wasted the Jewish people, God so ordaining in as far as He willed through them to punish in the present the sins of His people, yet they did it, not in view of God and out of zeal for righteousness, but out of pride covetousness and with the worst ends. Hence God says by Isaiah <sup>12</sup>, Wo to Asshur, the rod of Mine anger, and the staff in his hand is Mine indignation. Howbeit he

thinketh not so, but his heart is to destroy and cut off nations not a few.

16. Therefore. This being so, since God was so jealous for His people, so displeased with their persecutors, thus saith the Lord, <sup>13</sup> "I Who <sup>13</sup> in wrath remember mercy; am returned" <sup>14</sup>, not by change of place, Who am uncircumscribed, not existing in place, to the people of Judah and Jerusalem in mercies, manifoldly benefitting them by various effects of My love." The single benefits, the rebuilding of His House, and so the restoration of His public worship, and the rebuilding of Jerusalem, are but instances of that all-containing mercy, His restored presence in tender mercies <sup>15</sup>. I am returned, God says, although the effects of His return were yet to come.

A line shall be stretched forth over Jerusalem, before, when it stood, this had been done to destroy <sup>16</sup>; now, when destroyed, to rebuild <sup>17</sup>.

<sup>18</sup> "The temple was built then, when the foundations of the walls were not yet laid. In man's sight it would have seemed more provident that the walls should be first builded, that then the temple might be builded more securely. To God, in Whom Alone is the most firm stay of our life and salvation, it seemed otherwise. For it cannot be that he, to whom nothing is dearer than zeal for the most holy religion, should be forsaken of His help."

17. Cry yet, a further promise; not only should Jerusalem be rebuilt, but should, as we say, overflow with good <sup>19</sup>; and God, Who had seemed to cast off His people, should yet comfort her, and should shew in act that He had chosen her <sup>20</sup>. Zechariah thrice <sup>21</sup> repeats the promise, given through Isaiah <sup>22</sup> to Jerusalem, before her wasting by the Chaldeans, reminding the people thereby, that the restoration, in the dawn whereof they lived, had been promised two centuries before. Yet, against all appearances. My cities shall overflow with good, as being God's; yet would the Lord comfort Zion; yet would He choose Jerusalem.

<sup>23</sup> "What is the highest of all goods? what the sweetest solace in life? what the subject of joys? what the oblivion of past sorrow? That which the Son of God brought upon earth, when He illumined Jerusalem with the brightness of His light and heavenly discipline. For to that end was the city restored, that in it, by the ordinance of Christ, for calamity should abound bliss; for desolation, fulness; for sorrow, joy; for want, affluence of heavenly goods."

<sup>20</sup> בָּרַךְ is always "choose," not (as Ges. and others) "love." In all the cases, which Ges. cites as meaning "love," (Gen. vi. 2, 1 Sam. xx. 30, 2 Sam. xv. 15, Pr. i. 29, iii. 31, Is. i. 29) the sense would be injured by rendering, "loved."

But besides this contrast, קָצַר is seldom, comparatively, used of time, and that, as indicated by the context. Gen. xlvii. 9, "my days have been few;" Lev. xxv. 52, "if a little remains of the years;" Ru. ii. 7, "she sat a little in the house;" Job x. 20, "are not my days few?" xxiv. 24, "they are exalted a little, and are not." ## CHAPTER II.

1 God, in the care of Jerusalem, sendeth to measure it. 6 The redemption of Zion. 10 The promise of God's presence.

18 <sup>1</sup> And I lifted up mine eyes. “<sup>2</sup> Not those of the body (for such visions are invisible to the eyes of the flesh), but rather the inner eyes of the heart and mind.” It seems as though, at the close of each vision, Zechariah sank in meditation on what had been shewn him; from which he was again roused by the exhibition of another vision.

I saw four horns. The mention of the horns naturally suggests the thought of the creatures which wielded them; as in the first vision that of the horses following the chiefs, implies the presence of the riders upon them. And this the more, since the word “fray them away” implies living creatures, liable to fear. “<sup>3</sup> The horn, in inspired Scripture, is always taken as an image of strength, and mostly of pride also, as David said to some, <sup>4</sup> I said unto the fools, Deal not so foolishly, and to the ungodly, Lift not up the horns. Lift not up your horns on high and speak not with a stiff neck. The prophet then sees four horns, i. e. four hard and warlike nations, who could easily uproot cities and countries.”

These are the horns which have scattered. “<sup>5</sup> The four horns which scattered Judah Israel and Jerusalem, are four nations, Babylonians, Medes and Persians, Macedonians and Romans; as the Lord, on the prophet's enquiry, explains here, and Daniel unfolds most fully <sup>6</sup>; who in the vision of the image with golden head, silver breast, belly and thighs of brass, feet of iron and clay, explained it of these four nations, and again in another vision of four beasts <sup>7</sup>, lion, bear, leopard and another unnamed dreadful beast, he pointed out the same nations under another figure. But that the Medes and Persians, after the victory of Cyrus, were one kingdom, no one will doubt, who reads secular and sacred literature.—When this vision was beheld, the kingdom of the Babylonians had now passed away, that of the Medes and Persians was instant; that of Greeks and Macedonians and of the Romans was yet to come. What the Babylonians, what the Medes and Persians, what the Greeks i. e. the Macedonians, did to Judah, Israel and Jerusalem, a learned man acknowledgeth, especially under Antiochus, surnamed Epiphanes, to which the history of the Maccabees belongs. After the Coming of our Lord and Saviour, when Jerusalem was encompassed, Josephus, a native writer, tells most fully, what the Israelites endured, and the Gospel fore-announced. These horns dispersed Judah almost individually, so that, bowed down by the heavy weight of evils, no one of them raised his head.” Though these were successive in time, they are exhibited to Zechariah as one. One whole are the efforts against God's Church; one whole are the instruments of God, whether angelic or human, in doing or suffering, to repel them. Zechariah then exhibits these hostile powers as past and gone <sup>8</sup>, as each would be at the end, having put forth his passing might, and perishing. They scattered, each in its day, and disappeared; for the next displaced it.

The long schism being ended, Judah and Israel are again one; and Jerusalem, the place of God's worship, belongs to Israel as well as to Judah <sup>9</sup>.

The explanation of the number four, as symbolising contemporaneous attacks from the four quarters of the heavens, fails in matter of fact, that, in these later times, the Jews suffered always from one power at a time. There was no such fourfold attack. In Zechariah's time all around was Persian.

“<sup>10</sup> Those horns, broken by the angels' ministry, portended that no guilt against the Church of Christ should be unpunished. Never will there be wanting fierce enemies from E. W. N. or S., whom God will strengthen, in order by them to teach His own. But when He shall see His work finished, i. e. when He shall have cleansed the stains of His own and brought back His Church to her former purity, He will punish those who so fiercely afflicted her.”

Spiritually, “<sup>11</sup> those who destroy vices, build up virtues, and all the saints who, possessing these remedies, ever build up the Church, may be called ‘builders.’ Whence the Apostle says, <sup>12</sup> I, as a wise builder, laid the foundation; and the Lord, when wrath, said that He would <sup>13</sup> take away from Jerusalem artificer and wise man. And the Lord Himself, Son of the Almighty God and of the Creator of all, is called <sup>14</sup> the son of the carpenter.”

ii. 1. A man with a measuring line in his hand. Probably the Angel of the Lord, of whom Ezekiel has a like vision. “<sup>15</sup> He who before, when he lift up his eyes, had seen in the four horns things mournful, now again lifts up his eyes to see a man, of whom it is written, <sup>16</sup> Behold a man whose name is the Branch; of whom we read above, <sup>17</sup> Behold a man riding upon a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle trees, which were in the bottom. Of whom too the Father saith; He builded My city, <sup>1</sup>whose builder and maker is God. He too is seen by Ezekiel in a description like this, <sup>2</sup>a man whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, i. e. burnished <sup>3</sup>and shining as fire, with a line of flax in his hand and a measuring reed." The office also seems to be one of authority, not to measure the actual length and breadth of Jerusalem, but to lay down what it should be, "<sup>4</sup>to mark it out broad and very long."

<sup>8</sup> 77 <sup>9</sup> This is expressed by the use or omission of the rw. Its use coordinates Judah and Israel; its omission subordinates Jerusalem. <sup>10</sup> Onor. <sup>11</sup> S. 2 Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, <sup>b</sup>To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof.

3. The angel that talked with me went forth, probably to receive the explanation which was given him for Zechariah; and another angel, a higher angel, since he gives him a commission, went forth to meet him, being (it seems probable) instructed by the Angel of the Lord, who laid down the future dimensions of the city. The indefiniteness of the description, another angel, implies that he was neither the Angel of the Lord, nor (were they different) Michael, or the man with the measuring line, but an angel of intermediate rank, instructed by one higher, instructing the lower, who immediately instructed Zechariah.

And said unto him, Run, speak unto this young man, the prophet himself, who was to report to his people what he heard. Jeremiah says, <sup>5</sup>I am a youth; and <sup>6</sup>the young man, the young prophet, carried the prophetic message from Elisha to Jehu. "Youth," common as our English term in regard to man, is inapplicable and unapplied to angels, who have not our human variations of age, but exist, as they were created.

Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls, or as villages <sup>7</sup>, viz. an unconfined, uncramped population, spreading itself freely, without restraint of walls, and (it follows) without need of them. Clearly then it is no earthly city. To be inhabited as villages would be weakness, not strength; a peril, not a blessing. The earthly Jerusalem, so long as she remained unwalled, was in continual fear and weakness. God put it into the heart of His servant to desire to restore her; her wall was built, and then she prospered. He Himself had promised to Daniel, that <sup>8</sup>Her street shall be rebuilt, and her wall, even in strait of times. Nehemiah mourned 73 years after this, B.C. 443, when it was told him, <sup>9</sup>The remnant that are left of the captivity there in the province are in great affliction and reproach: the wall of Jerusalem also is broken down, and the gates thereof are burned with fire. He said to Artaxerxes, <sup>10</sup>Why should not my countenance be sad, when the city, the place of my fathers' sepulchres, lieth waste, and the gates thereof are consumed with fire? When permitted by Artaxerxes to return, he addressed the rulers of the Jews, <sup>11</sup>Ye see the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire; come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more a reproach; and they said, let us rise and build. So they strengthened their hands for this good work. When

4 And said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, <sup>c</sup>Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein:

<sup>12</sup> the wall was finished and our enemies heard, and the heathen about us saw it, they were much cast down in their own eyes; for they perceived that this work was wrought of our God.

This prophecy then looks on directly to the time of Christ. Wonderfully does it picture the gradual expansion of the kingdom of Christ, without bound or limit, whose protection and glory God is, and the character of its defences. It should dwell as villages, peacefully and gently expanding itself to the right and the left, through its own inherent power of multiplying itself, as a city, to which no bounds were assigned, but which was to fill the earth. "<sup>13</sup>For us God hath raised a Church, that truly holy and far-famed city, which Christ fortifieth, consuming opponents by invisible powers, and filling it with His own glory, and as it were, standing in the midst of those who dwell in it. For He promised; Lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world. This holy city Isaiah mentioned: <sup>13</sup>thine eyes shall see Jerusalem, a quiet habitation; a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken; and to her he saith, <sup>14</sup>enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitation; spare not; lengthen thy cords and strengthen thy stakes. For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left. For the Church of Christ is widened and extended boundlessly, ever receiving countless souls who worship Him."

"<sup>15</sup>What king or emperor could make walls so ample as to include the whole world? Yet, without this, it could not encircle that Jerusalem, the Church which is diffused through the whole world. This Jerusalem, the pilgrim part of the heavenly Jerusalem, is, in this present world, inhabited without walls, not being contained in one place or one nation. But in that world, whither it is daily being removed hence, much more can there not, nor ought to be, nor is, any wall around, save the Lord, Who is also the glory in the midst of it."

5. And I, Myself <sup>16</sup>in My own Being, will be to her a wall of fire, not protection only, an inner circle around her, however near an enemy might press in upon her, but destructive to her enemies. Isaiah says, <sup>17</sup>No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise in judgement against thee thou shalt condemn. Its defence, Isaiah says, shall be immaterial. <sup>18</sup>We have a strong city; salvation shall God appoint for walls and bulwarks; <sup>19</sup>thou shalt call thy walls salvation and thy gates praise. By a different figure it is said, <sup>20</sup>I will encamp about mine house because of the army.

And glory will I be in the midst of her, as Isaiah says, <sup>21</sup>The Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory; and of Christ, <sup>22</sup>In that day shall the Branch of the Lord be Beauty and Glory—to the escaped of Israel.

6 ¶ Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the LORD: for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the LORD.

Deut. 28. 64. Ezek. 17. 21.

6. Ho! ho! and flee. Such being the safety and glory in store for God's people in Jerusalem, He Who had so provided it, the Angel of the Lord, bids His people everywhere to come to it, saving themselves also from the peril which was to come on Babylon. So Isaiah bade them, Go ye forth of Babylon; flee ye from the Chaldeans with a voice of singing; declare ye, tell this, utter it to the end of the earth; say ye, The Lord hath redeemed His servant Jacob. Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence; touch no unclean thing: go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord; and Jeremiah, Flee ye out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul; be not cut off in her iniquity, for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance; He will render unto her a recompense. My people, go ye out of the midst of her, and deliver ye, every man his soul from the fierce anger of the Lord.

The words, flee, deliver thyself, imply an imminent peril on Babylon, such as came upon her, two years after this prophecy, in the fourth year of Darius. But the earnestness of the command, its repetition by three prophets, the context in Isaiah and Jeremiah, imply something more than temporal peril, the peril of the infection of the manners of Babylon, which may have detained there many who did not return. Whence in the New Testament, the words are cited, as to the great evil city of the world; Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you; and under the name of Babylon; I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

For I have spread you abroad as the four winds of heaven. The north country, although its capital and centre was Babylon, was the whole Babylonian empire, called 'the North' because its invasions always came upon Israel from the North. But the book of Esther shews that, sixty years after this, the Jews were dispersed over the 127 provinces of the Persian empire, from India (the Punjaub) to Ethiopia, whether they were purposely placed by the policy of the conquerors in detached groupes, as the ten tribes were in the cities of the Medes, or whether, when more trusted, they migrated of their own accord. God, in calling them to return, reminds them of the greatness of their dispersion. He had dispersed them abroad as the four winds of heaven; He, the Same, recalled them.

7. Dwellest with the daughter of Babylon. The unusual idiom<sup>11</sup> is perhaps chosen as expressive of God's tenderness, even to the people who were to be destroyed, from which Israel was to escape.

7<sup>b</sup> Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon.

8 For thus saith the LORD of hosts; After the glory hath he sent me unto the

8. After the glory<sup>12</sup>, "which it is promised to bring upon you." This being the usual construction, the words involve a great course of God's dealing, of first shewing favour to those who will receive favour, then abandoning or punishing the rest; as, when the eight souls had been received into the ark, the flood came; when Lot and his had escaped out of Sodom, the fire came down from heaven; when Israel had passed the Red Sea, Pharaoh's hosts were drowned; the election obtained what Israel sought for, the rest were blinded<sup>14</sup>. The glory then would be the glory, of which God says, I will be the glory in the midst of you.

But further He Who speaketh is Almighty God, Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, He hath sent me; For lo I wave My hand against them—and ye shall know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me; Lo I come and dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord, and many nations shall cleave unto the Lord in that day, and they shall be to Me a people and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know, that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you. In all which series of promises, the I, of whom Israel were to know that the Lord of hosts had sent Him, is the I, Who affirms of Himself what belongs to Almighty God only, inflicting punishment on the enemies of Judah, indwelling the Church and people, receiving the Heathen as His own; and it is precisely by all these acts of power and love, that Israel shall know that the Lord of hosts had sent Him.

<sup>16</sup> In what follows, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, After glory, He hath sent Me &c., the Saviour is introduced speaking, Who, being Almighty God, saith that He was sent by the Father Almighty, not according to that whereby He was Almighty, but according to that, that, after glory, He was sent, Who bring in the Form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant, and was made obedient unto the Father even unto death; and that, the death of the Cross. Nor is it marvel that Christ is called Almighty, in Whose Person we read in the Apocalypse of John, These things saith the faithful Witness, —I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which was and which is and which is to come, the Almighty. <sup>19</sup> to Whom all power is given in heaven and in earth; and Who saith, All things of the Father's are Mine. But if all things, i. e. God from God, Lord from Lord, Light from Light, therefore also Almighty from Almighty; for it cannot be, that diverse should be the glory of those whose Nature is One."

So generally אֵלֶּךְ is used with verbs of motion, הֵלֵךְ אַחֲרַי, Gen. xxxvii. 17, 2 Kgs xxxiii. 3; יָבֵא אַחֲרַי, Nu. xxv. 8; דָּרַךְ אַחֲרַי, 1 Sam. xii. 14; דָּרַךְ אַחֲרַי, 2 Kgs xxv. 5; יָצָא אַחֲרַי, 1 Sam. x. 7; or, spiritually, אַחֲרַי כְּשֶׁבִיחֵי, Is. lxxv. 2; אַחֲרַי רִחֵם, Ez. xiii. 8; אַחֲרַי עֵינֵי הָרֶקֶב לִבִּי, Job xxxi. 7; but אַחֲרַי is not used in our sense of seeking, "going after a thing," except in the one phrase אַחֲרַי כִּלְיֹתֶיךָ Job xxxix. 8, "searcheth after every green thing." It is the less probable here, because, apart from this, (besides the 5 duplicate passages in Isaiah and 2 Kings, 2 Sam. and 1 Chronicles) the construction of אַחֲרַי with acc. of the person sent and אֵלֶּךְ of the person to whom he is sent, occurs in 71 passages. (Ges. cites 23 of them) and in no one case is the object for which they were sent, added by any preposition. Four are in Zechariah himself ii. 12, 15, iv. 9, vi. 15. <sup>19</sup> Our God shall come manifestly, and shall not keep silence. Then also was there a haven for the Gentiles. For now no longer was the race of Israel alone taught, but the whole earth was engoldened with the evangelical preachings, and in every nation and country great is His Name."

"<sup>20</sup> This too is to be understood of the Person of the Lord, that He exhorts His people, being restored from the captivity to their former abode, to be glad and rejoice, because the Lord Himself cometh and dwelleth in the midst of her, and many nations shall believe in Him, of Whom it is said, <sup>21</sup> Ask of Me and I will give Thee nations for Thine inheritance, and the ends of the earth for Thy possession, and He shall dwell in the midst of them, as He saith to His disciples, <sup>22</sup> Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

11. And many nations shall join themselves, cleaving to Him by a close union. Isaiah had so spoken of single proselytes<sup>23</sup>; Jeremiah had used the word of Israel's self-exhortation after the return from Babylon; <sup>24</sup> going and weeping, they shall go and seek the Lord their God, saying, Come and let us join ourselves unto the Lord, in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten. This Zechariah now predicts of many nations. The Jews were scarcely half-restored themselves, a mere handful. They had wrought no conversions among the heathen, yet prophecy continues its unbroken voice, many nations shall join themselves unto the Lord.

And shall be My people, lit. be to Me a people. This is exactly the history of the Christian Church, unity amid diversity; many nations still retaining their national existence, yet owned by God as one people and His own. The words are those in which God adopted Israel in Egypt; <sup>25</sup> I will take you to Me for a people, and I will be your God. This was the covenant with them. <sup>26</sup> that thou shouldest enter into covenant with the Lord thy God,—that He may establish thee to-day for a people unto Himself, and that He may be unto thee a God. The contrary was the title of the heathen, <sup>27</sup> not a people; with whom God said, I will move Israel to jealousy. The closeness of union Jeremiah expresses; <sup>28</sup> As the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I caused to cleave to Me the whole house of Israel and the whole house of Judah, saith the Lord, that they might be unto Me for a people and for a name and for a praise and for a glory. This was the object of the existence of Israel; to this it was to be restored<sup>29</sup> by conversion<sup>30</sup>; to this special privilege of Israel many nations were to be admitted; yet not so as to be separate from Israel, for He adds, and I will dwell in the midst of thee,

And ye shall know that the Lord of hosts hath sent Me. <sup>6</sup> He was sent, not as God, but as Man. For as God He is equal to the Father. For He saith, <sup>7</sup> I am in the Father and the Father in Me, and, The Father Who dwelleth in Me He doeth the works, and, <sup>8</sup> I and My Father are one, and <sup>9</sup> He who hath seen Me hath seen the Father. But He is sent, as Man, fulfilling the dispensation for us, not lessening the Divine Nature. The Prophet then intimated not the duality only, but the equality of the Persons.<sup>10</sup>

10. Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion. It is a great jubilee of joy, to which Zion is invited. Thrice besides is she invited with this same word, and all for the restored or renewed Presence of God. <sup>10</sup> Cry aloud for joy, thou barren which bare not, as here, on the coming in of the Gentiles, <sup>11</sup> Cry aloud for joy, O daughter of Zion; jubilate, O Israel; rejoice and exult with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem; the Lord, the King of Israel, is in the midst of thee. <sup>12</sup> Shout and cry aloud for joy, O inhabitant of Zion; for great in the midst of thee is the Holy One of Israel. The source of joy is a fresh coming of God, a coming, whereby He should dwell abidingly among them: truly what is this, but the Incarnation? As S. John saith, <sup>13</sup> The Word was made Flesh and dwelt among us; and, <sup>14</sup> Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself shall be with them and shall be their God. <sup>15</sup> Hence too you may learn how great a subject of contentment above is the Presence of the Saviour upon earth. He could not then but bid the spiritual Zion, <sup>16</sup> which is the Church of the Living God, the most sacred multitude of those saved by faith, to cry aloud for joy and rejoice. But it was announced that He should come and be in the midst of her. For S. John saith to us, The Word <sup>17</sup> was in the world, and, being God, was not severed from His creatures, but He was Himself the Source of life to all living, and holding all things together to well-being and life; but <sup>17</sup> the world knew Him not: for it worshipped the creature. But He came among us, when, taking our likeness, He was conceived by the holy Virgin, and <sup>18</sup> was seen upon earth and conversed with men, and the divine David witnesseth saying,

† Heb. the habitation of his holiness, Deut. 26. 15. Isai. 63. 15.

Judah. God would dwell in His Church, formed of Israel and the Gentiles, yet so that the Gentiles should be grafted into Israel, becoming one with them.

12. And the Lord shall inherit Judah His portion. The inheritance of the Lord is the title which God commonly gave to Israel<sup>1</sup>. God is said to be the portion of Israel<sup>2</sup>; of the pious<sup>3</sup>; once only besides, is Israel said to be the portion of God<sup>4</sup>; once only is God said to inherit Israel, <sup>5</sup> Pardon our iniquity and our sin, and take us for thine inheritance. Zechariah unites the two rare idioms.

In the holy land. The land is again made holy by God, and sanctified by His Presence. So He calls the place where He revealed Himself to Moses, holy ground<sup>6</sup>. So it is said, <sup>7</sup> the holy place, <sup>8</sup> the holy house, <sup>9</sup> the holy ark, <sup>10</sup> the holy city, <sup>11</sup> the holy mountain, <sup>12</sup> the holy people, <sup>13</sup> the holy chambers, or, with reference to their relation to God Who consecrates them, <sup>14</sup> My holy mountain, <sup>15</sup> Thy holy habitation, <sup>16</sup> Thy holy dwelling-place, <sup>17</sup> Thy holy temple, <sup>18</sup> Thy holy mountain, <sup>19</sup> Thy holy oracle, <sup>20</sup> Thy holy city, <sup>21</sup> cities, <sup>22</sup> His holy place, <sup>23</sup> His holy border. It is not one technical expression, as people now by a sort of effort speak of "the holy land." Every thing which has reference to God is holy. The land is holy, not for any merits of theirs, but because God was worshipped there, was specially present there. It was an anticipation and type of "Thy holy Church throughout all the world doth acknowledge Thee." This land their fathers had <sup>24</sup> polluted with blood; God says, <sup>25</sup> they defiled My land; Ezekiel called her eminently, <sup>26</sup> the land that is not cleansed. Now God said, <sup>27</sup> I will remove the iniquity of the land, and she was again a holy land, as hallowed by Him.

It is not a mere conversion of the heathen, but, as Isaiah<sup>28</sup> and Micah<sup>29</sup> foretold; a conversion, of which Jerusalem should be the centre, as our Lord explained to the Apostles after His Resurrection, <sup>30</sup> that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

13. Be silent, lit. hush<sup>31</sup>, all flesh, before the Lord; man in his weakness<sup>32</sup>, flesh and blood in the language of the New Testament<sup>33</sup>, before God his Maker. All flesh, the whole human race<sup>34</sup>, is to be hushed before God, because His judgments, as His mercies, are over all.

For God ariseth. God seemeth to be quiescent, as it were, when He bears with us; to arise, when He puts forth His power, either for us, when we pray, <sup>35</sup> Lord, awake to help me; or in displeasure. His holy habitation is alike the tabernacle<sup>36</sup>, temple<sup>37</sup>, heaven<sup>38</sup>, since His presence is in all.

III. 1. And He, God, (for the office of the attendant angel was to explain, not to shew the visions) shewed me Joshua the High Priest, standing before the Angel of the Lord; probably to be judged by him<sup>39</sup>; as in the New Testament, to stand before the Son of Man; for although standing before, whether in relation to man<sup>40</sup> or God<sup>41</sup>, expresses attendance upon, yet here it appears only as a condition, contemporaneous<sup>42</sup> with that of Satan's, to accuse him. Although, moreover, the Angel speaks with authority, yet God's Presence in him is not spoken of so distinctly, that the High Priest would be exhibited as standing before him, as in his office before God.

And Satan, etymologically, the enemy, as, in the New Testament, <sup>43</sup> your adversary the devil, etymologically, the accuser. It is a proper name of the Evil one, yet its original meaning, the enemy<sup>44</sup>, was not lost. Here, as in Job, his malice is shewn in accusation; <sup>45</sup> the accuser of our brethren, who accused them before our God, day and night. In Job<sup>46</sup>, the accusations were calumnious; here, doubtless, true. For he accused Job of what would have been plain apostasy<sup>47</sup>; Joshua and Zerubbabel had shared, or given way to, the remissness of the people, as to the rebuilding of the temple and the full restoration of the worship of God<sup>1</sup>. For this, Haggai had reproved the people, through them<sup>2</sup>. Satan had then a real charge, on which to implead them. Since also the whole series of visions relates to the restoration from the captivity, the guilt, for which Satan impleads him with Jerusalem and Jerusalem in him, includes the whole guilt, which had rested upon them, so that for a time God had seemed to have cast away His people<sup>3</sup>. Satan stands at his right hand, the place of a protector<sup>4</sup>, to shew that he had none to save him, and that himself was victorious.

2. And the Lord said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee. <sup>5</sup> "This they so explain, that the Father and the Son is Lord, as we read in the 110th Psalm, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand. The Lord speaketh of another Lord; not that He, the Lord Who speaketh, cannot rebuke, but that, from the unity of nature, when the Other rebuketh, He Himself Who speaketh rebuketh. For <sup>6</sup> he who seeth the Son, seeth the Father also." It may be that God, by such sayings<sup>7</sup>, also accustomed men, before Christ came, to believe in the Plurality of Persons in the One Godhead.

The rebuke of God must be with power. <sup>8</sup> Thou hast rebuked the nations, Thou hast destroyed the ungodly. <sup>9</sup> Thou hast rebuked the proud, accursed. <sup>10</sup> They perish at the rebuke of Thy Countenance. <sup>11</sup> At Thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse are cast into a deep sleep. <sup>12</sup> God shall rebuke him, and he fleeth far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind. <sup>13</sup> He rebuked the Red Sea and it dried up. <sup>14</sup> The foundations of the world were discovered at Thy rebuke, O Lord. He <sup>15</sup> rebuked the seed, and it perished; the devourer<sup>16</sup>, and it no longer devoured. The rebuke then of the blasted spirit involved a withering rejection of himself and his accusations, as when Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit and he departed out of his victim<sup>17</sup>.

The Lord hath chosen Jerusalem. Joshua then is acquitted, not because the accusation of Satan was false, but out of the free love of God for His people and for Joshua in it and as its representative. <sup>18</sup> Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? The high priest, being <sup>19</sup> himself also compassed with infirmity, needed daily to offer up sacrifices first for his own sins, and then for the people's. As Isaiah said, on the sight of God, <sup>20</sup> I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, and, until cleansed by the typical coal, dared not offer himself for the prophetic office, so here Satan, in Joshua, aimed at the whole priestly office, and in it, at Israel's relation to God.

Is not this a brand plucked out of the fire? <sup>21</sup> As if he should say, Israel confessedly has sinned, and is liable to these charges. Yet it has suffered no slight punishment; it has endured sufferings, and has scarce been snatched out of them, as a half-burned brand out of the fire. For not yet had it shaken off the dust of the harms from the captivity: only just now and scarcely had it escaped the flame of that most intolerable calamity. Cease then imputing sin to them, on whom God has had mercy."

3. Now Joshua was clothed with filthy garments; such, it is expressed, was his habitual condition<sup>22</sup>; he was one so clothed. The filthy garment, as defilement generally, is, in Scripture, the symbol of sin. <sup>23</sup> We are all as the unclean, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags. <sup>24</sup> He that is left in Zion and he that remaineth in Jerusalem shall be called holy—when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion. <sup>25</sup> There is a generation, pure in its own eyes, and it is not washed from its filthiness. The same is expressed by different words, signifying pollution, defilement by sin; <sup>26</sup> Wo unto her that is filthy and polluted; <sup>27</sup> The land was defiled with blood; <sup>28</sup> they were defiled with their own works. It is symbolised also by the <sup>29</sup> divers washings of the law, representing restored purity; and the use of the word by Psalmists and Prophets; <sup>30</sup> Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity; <sup>31</sup> wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before Mine eyes; <sup>32</sup> O Jerusalem, wash thy heart from wickedness. In later times at least, the accused were clothed in black<sup>33</sup>, not in defiled<sup>34</sup> garments.

4. And He spake to those who stood before Him. the ministering Angels who had waited on the Angel of the Lord to do His bidding.

See, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee; the pardoning words of the Lord to David by Nathan, <sup>35</sup> The Lord too hath put away thy sin. And clothe thee<sup>36</sup> with change of raiment<sup>37</sup>, i. e. such as were taken off and reserved for great occasions. As the filthy garments were not necessarily other than the High Priest's vesture, symbolically defiled through the sins of the people, so neither need these be other than the priestly garments in their purity and freshness. The words imply the condition, not the nature of the vestment. <sup>38</sup> The high-priest having been thus taken to represent the whole people, the filthy garments would be no unclean symbol of the wickedness of the people. For clad, as it were, with their sins, with the ill-effaceable spot of ungodliness, they abode in captivity, subject to retribution, paying the penalty of their unholy deeds. But when God had pity on them, He bade them be freed from their defile-

ch. 6. 11.

5 And I said, Let them set a fair <sup>b</sup> mitre upon his head. So they set a fair mitre upon his head, and clothed him with garments. And the angel of the Lord stood by.

6 And the angel of the Lord protested unto Joshua, saying,

7 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; If thou

ments, and in a manner re-clad with justifying grace. He indicates to them the end of their toils. For where remission of sin is, there follows of necessity freedom from the evils brought through sin.—He adds that a clean mitre should be put upon his head, “<sup>a</sup> that so we might understand that the glory of the priesthood ever, in a sort, concurs with the condition of the people. For the boast of the priesthood is the purity of those in their charge.—As then when the people was in sin, the raiment of the priest also was in a manner defiled, so if it were again well-approved, pure and bright is the fashion of the priesthood, and free its access to God. So the divine Paul having ministered to the Gentiles the Gospel of Christ, seeing them advancing in graces, writes, <sup>b</sup> By your boast, brethren, which I have in Christ Jesus, and, <sup>c</sup> my joy and crown.”

5. And I said, let them set a fair mitre<sup>d</sup> on his head. This seems to have been purposely omitted, in order to leave something, and that, the completion of all, to be done at the intercession of the prophet. The glory and complement of the High Priest's sacrificial attire was the mitre with the holy crown upon it and the plate of pure gold, on which was graven, Holiness to the Lord<sup>e</sup>; which was to be upon the High-priest's forehead, that he may bear the iniquity of the holy things which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts; which was always to be upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the Lord. The renewed gift of this was reserved for the intercession of man co-working with God.

And the angel of the Lord standing by, seeing that all was done aright, and, now that the acquittal was complete, standing to give the charge.

6. And the angel of the Lord protested solemnly (etymologically, called God to witness) as in, <sup>f</sup> Did I not make thee swear by the Lord and protested unto thee, laying it as an obligation upon him<sup>g</sup>. The charge is given to Joshua, and in him to all successive high-priests, while Israel should continue to be God's people, as the condition of their acceptance.

7. If thou wilt walk in My ways and if thou wilt keep My charge. Both of these are expressions, dating from the Pentateuch, for holding on in the way of life, well-pleasing to God and keeping the charge given by God<sup>h</sup>. It was the injunction of the dying David to Solomon, <sup>i</sup> Keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in His ways, to keep His statutes &c.

Then shalt thou also judge My house. Judgement, in the place of God, was part of the High-priest's office<sup>10</sup>. Yet these judgements also were given in the house of God. The cause was directed to be brought to God, and He through His priests judged it. Both then may be comprehended in the word, the oversight of the people itself and the judgement of all causes brought to it. “<sup>11</sup> Thou shalt judge those who minister in the house of My sanctuary.”

And I will give thee place to walk among those who stand by<sup>12</sup>, i. e., among the ministering spirits, who were <sup>13</sup> standing before the Angel of the Lord. This can be fully only after death, when the saints shall be received among the several choirs of angels. “<sup>11</sup> In the resurrection of the dead I will revive thee and give thee feet walking among these Seraphim.” Even in this life, since <sup>14</sup> our conversation is in heaven, and the life of priests should be an angel-life, it may mean, that he should have free access to God, his soul in heaven, while his body was on this earth.

8. Thou and thy companions which sit before thee; yea<sup>15</sup> men of marvellous signs are they<sup>16</sup>. It seems probable that the words addressed to Joshua begin here; else the men of signs would be the companions of Joshua, to the exclusion of himself. His companions are probably ordinary priests, who sit as sharing his dignity as priest, but before him, as inferiors. So Ezekiel says, <sup>17</sup> I was sitting in my house, and the elders of Israel were sitting before me. They are <sup>18</sup> images of the things to come. Isaiah's two sons, with their prophetic names, Haste-spoil speed-prey, and a-remnant shall-return, were with his own name, salvation-of-the-Lord, <sup>19</sup> signs and portents of the future Israel. Isaiah, walking naked and barefoot, was <sup>20</sup> a sign and portent against Egypt. God tells Ezekiel, that in the removal of his stuff, as stuff for the captivity, <sup>21</sup> I have set thee for a portent unto the house of Israel. I, he explains his act<sup>22</sup>, am your portent; like as I have done, so shall it be done unto you. When forbidden to mourn on the death of his wife; <sup>23</sup> Ezekiel is unto you for a portent; according to all that he hath done, shall ye do; and when this cometh, ye shall know that I am the Lord God. Wherein then were Joshua and the other priests portents of what should be? One fact alone had stood out, the forgiveness of sins. Accusation and full forgiveness, out of God's free mercy, were the substance of the whole previous vision. It was the full re-instatement of the priesthood. The priesthood so restored was the portent of what was to come. To <sup>24</sup> offer the offering of the people, and

<sup>12</sup> Against the rendering, “those who shall make thee to go,” i. e., guide thee. (סֹלֵהִים for סֹלֵהִים) there were valid objections: 1) that the Hif. is always הוֹלִיךְ, except הוֹלִיךְ Ex. ii. 9. The Partic. סֹלֵהִים occurs 9 times, once in Zech. v. 10. 2) It would have been probably “out of these” or at least “from among these.” כְּהֹלֵהִים is then probably from a sing. סֹלֵהִים like סֹלֵהִים, סֹלֵהִים (סֹלֵהִים) for סֹלֵהִים Jon. iii. 3, 4. make an atonement for them; <sup>1</sup> to make an atonement for the children of Israel for all their sins once a year, was the object of the existence of the priesthood. Typical only it could be, because they had but the blood of bulls and goats to offer, which could, in themselves, <sup>2</sup> never take away sins. But in this their act they were portents of what was to come. He adds here, For, behold, I will bring My Servant the Branch.

The Branch had now become, or Zechariah made it, a proper name. Isaiah had prophesied, <sup>3</sup> In that day shall the Branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious for the escaped of Israel; and, in reference to the low estate of him who should come, <sup>4</sup> There shall come forth a rod out of the stump of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots; and Jeremiah, <sup>5</sup> Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgement and justice in the earth, and this is the name whereby He shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness; and, <sup>6</sup> In those days and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David, and he shall execute judgement and righteousness in the land. Of him Zechariah afterwards spoke as, <sup>7</sup> a man whose name is the Branch. Here Zechariah names him simply, as a proper name, My servant [the] Branch, as Ezekiel prophesied of <sup>8</sup> My servant David. The title My servant, which is Isaiah's chiefest title of the Messiah, occurs in connection with the same image of His youth's lowly estate, and of His atoning Death. <sup>9</sup> He shall grow up before Him as a sucker, and as a root from a dry ground; <sup>10</sup> a scion shall grow out of his roots. <sup>11</sup> He alone was above all marked by this name, who never in anything withdrew from the Will of God. <sup>12</sup> God had before promised to Joshua, i. e. to the priesthood of the law, that they should judge His house and fulfil the types of the legal worship. Yet not long after, the things of the law were to be translated into the true worship, and the unloveliness of the types to be recast into the lovely spiritual polity. <sup>13</sup> A righteous king was to reign and princes to rule with judgement, as the Prophet spake. Another priest was to arise, after the order, <sup>14</sup> not of Aaron but of Melchisedec, <sup>15</sup> a minister of the sanctuary and of the true tabernacle which God pitched and not man. For our Lord Jesus Christ entered the holy of holies, <sup>16</sup> not by the blood of bulls and goats, but by His own Blood, having obtained eternal redemption, and <sup>17</sup> having by One Oblation perfected for ever them that are sanctified. Lest then God should seem to have spoken untruly, in promising to the legal priesthood that it should ever have the oversight over His house, there was need to fore-announce the mystery of Christ, that the things of the law should cease and He Himself should judge His own house through the Scion from Himself, His Son.

"<sup>11</sup> Look ye to the Branch of the Lord; set Him as the example of life; in Him, as a most strong tower, place with most becoming faith all your hope of salvation and immortality. For He is not only a Branch, who shall fill you with the richness of Divine fruit, but a stone also, to break all the essays of the enemy."

9. For behold the stone, that I have laid before Joshua. This must be an expansion of what he had said, or the ground of it, being introduced by, for. It must be something future, to be done by God Himself, since God says, I will grave the gravings thereof; something connected with the remission of sins, which follows upon that gravings. The stone, then, cannot be the stone of foundation of the material temple<sup>18</sup>. For this had long before been laid. The head-corner-stone, the completion of the building<sup>19</sup>, had nothing remarkable, why God should be said to grave it. The plumb-line<sup>20</sup> was not a part even of the material temple. The stone is one stone. But to interpret it by other prophecy, one stone there is, of which God says, <sup>21</sup> Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation, he that believeth shall not make haste; that stone, of which our Lord reminded the Jews, <sup>22</sup> the stone which the builders refused is become the head-stone of the corner; <sup>23</sup> Jesus Christ Himself, the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth into an holy temple in the Lord, in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.

On this stone had Joshua, with all those typical priests, to look, in Whom Alone they and all have forgiveness, Whose Sacrifice their sacrifices pictured and pleaded. "It," says an old mystical Jewish book<sup>24</sup>, "is the stone of foundation, on which the earth is founded, which God Himself laid, that the world might receive blessing from it." <sup>25</sup> "The Shechinah is called the stone, through which the world subsisteth; of which it is said, A stone of seven eyes, and, the stone which the builders refused." This stone, God says, I have laid or set before Joshua, i. e. for him to consider; as He speaks to Solomon and his children, of My commandments which I have set before you<sup>26</sup>. <sup>27</sup> "That the stone is the Lord Jesus Christ, the head corner-stone, elect, laid as a foundation; and that the seven eyes on the one stone are the sevenfold Spirit of God which rested upon Him, is or ought to be unknown to no one. For to Him <sup>28</sup> God giveth not the Spirit by measure, and <sup>29</sup> in Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. This stone was rejected by men, but chosen and honoured by God." <sup>30</sup> "This stone then, on which the house of God and our whole salvation resteth, is placed by God before that high priest. That is, the most holy Name of Jesus, the virtue piety and largeness of Jesus is, by the Divine Spirit, seems to identify the Branch, the Messiah, and the Stone; "Lo I am bringing My Servant Messiah, and He shall be revealed. Lo, the stone which I have set before Joshua, upon one stone seven eyes, beholding it; lo, I revealed the vision thereof, saith the Lord of hosts, and will remove the guilt of that land in one day." The Zohar chadash (f. 76. l.) joins the mention of the stone in Dan. ii. 35, Ps. cxviii. 22, Gen. xlix. 24. and this place, in Schoettg. l. c. p. 140. n. cv.

shewed to the priest, that he might understand the End of the law and holiness, to Whom all the actions of life and the offices of the priesthood were to be referred. In which stone was foreshewn to the divine man, not the invisible strength only, but also the manifold light of the Divine intelligence. For it follows ;

Upon this one stone are seven eyes, whether they are the eyes of God, resting in loving care upon it, or whether, as the wheels in Ezekiel's vision were <sup>1</sup> full of eyes round about, the eyes are pictured as on the stone itself, marking that it symbolised a being with manifold intelligence. Zechariah speaks of the eyes of <sup>2</sup> the Lord which run to and fro on the earth, and S. John, of the <sup>3</sup> Lamb, as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God, sent forth into all the earth. Either symbol harmonises with the context, and is admissible in language<sup>4</sup>. The care of God for this stone is expressed before and afterwards, I have laid it, I will engrave the graving thereof; and so it corresponds to the <sup>5</sup> It shall grow up before Him as a tender plant. But the contrast, that on one stone there are seven eyes, perhaps rather suggests that the eyes are on the stone itself, and He, the Living Stone, is pictured with an universality of sight, whereby, with a Divine knowledge, He surveys and provides for the well-being of His whole Church. It has some analogy too to the sevenfold Spirit which was to rest upon Him. <sup>6</sup> For this stone to have seven eyes is to retain in operation the whole virtue of the Spirit of sevenfold grace. For according to the distribution of the Holy Spirit, one receives prophecy; another, knowledge; another, miracles; another, kinds of tongues; another, interpretation of words; but no one attaineth to have all the gifts of that same Spirit. But our Creator taking on Him our infirmities, because, through the power of His Divinity, He shewed that He had at once in Him all the virtues of the Holy Spirit, united beyond doubt the bright gleams of the sevenfold constellation." "None among men had together all the operations of the Holy Spirit, save the Mediator of God and man Alone, Whose is that same Spirit, Who proceeds from the Father before all worlds." <sup>7</sup> The stone is one. For as we have in God One Spirit, one faith, one sacrament of that most pure laver, so we worship One Christ, the one only Deliverer of the human race, and Author of our righteousness and everlasting salvation; and strengthened by His guardianship, we hope for immortality and eternal glory. Who, though He be One, governs all things with ineffable wisdom. For His wisdom is aptly described by the seven eyes. For the number seven generally describes an universality of good."

Behold I will engrave the graving<sup>8</sup> thereof, as of a costly stone. What the graving is, is not explained; but manifestly it is every thing which concurs to its beauty. <sup>9</sup> "This stone is of earth, and of the power and workmanship of God." <sup>10</sup> It signifies Him Who had His birth in virgin-earth, but framed skilfully by the power of the Holy Spirit." That Precious stone was further graven, through the Providence and Will of God, when <sup>11</sup> He caused it to be wounded by the nails of the Cross and the soldier's lance, and in His Passion took away the iniquity of the earth in one day, of which it is written, <sup>12</sup> This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it. Beautiful were the gifts and graces which Christ received, as Man; but beautiful beyond all beauty must be those glorious scars, with which He allowed His whole Body to be riven, that <sup>13</sup> throughout the whole frame His love might be engraven." <sup>14</sup> What even in the Body of the Lord can be lovelier or more lightful than those five Wounds, which He willed to retain in His immortal Being, lest the blessed should be deprived of that splendour, surpassing far the light of sun and stars?"

And I will remove the iniquity of the land in one day. On one day in the year was the typical atonement; in one day absolutely, God Himself would make the iniquity of that land to depart. One day is always emphatic<sup>15</sup>, that things are crowded into it, which seemed too much for one day. Year by year came the day of atonement: its yearly repetition shewed that nothing lasting was effected. On one day that removal should be, which needed no renewal<sup>16</sup>. A Jewish writer confessed the mystery, while he said<sup>17</sup>, "One day; I know not what that day is." Ask any Christian child, "On what day was iniquity removed, not from the land only, but from all lands?" he would say, "On the day when Jesus Died."

10. Under the vine and under the figtree. Micah had already made the description of the peaceful days of Solomon<sup>18</sup>, a symbol<sup>19</sup> of the universal fearless peace of the time of Christ. <sup>20</sup> Christ by His Passion shall not only take away iniquity, but also bring peace, delight, free communication of all things, so that all things among Christians should be common. For the law of Christ enjoineeth charity, forgiveness of injuries, patience, love of enemies &c., all which bring temporal peace."

iv. 1. The angel came again. The angel (as before <sup>1</sup>) had gone forth to receive some fresh instruction from a higher angel or from God.

And awakened me, as a man is awakened out of sleep. Zechariah, overwhelmed by the greatness of the visions, must have sunk down in a sort of stupor, as after the vision of the ram and he-goat, as Gabriel was speaking with him, Daniel says, <sup>2</sup> I was in a deep sleep on my face toward the ground, and he touched me and set me upright; and again at the voice of the angel, who, after his three weeks' fast <sup>3</sup>, came to declare to him <sup>4</sup> the scripture of truth; and at the Transfiguration, <sup>5</sup> Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep, and when they were awake, they saw His glory. "Wondrous and stupendous mysteries were they which were shewn to the divine man. He saw the Branch of the Lord; he saw His invincible might; he saw His brightness of Divine intelligence and Providence; he saw the amplitude of beauty and dignity. Nailed then and struck still with amazement, while he revolved these things in his mind, sunk in a sort of sleep, he is borne out of himself and, mantled around with darkness, understands that the secret things of Divine wisdom cannot be perfectly comprehended by the mind of any. This then he attained that, his senses being overpowered, he should see nothing, save that wherein is the sum of wisdom, that this immensity of the Divine excellence cannot be searched out. By this sleep he was seized, when he was roused by the angel to see further mysteries." "Such is the condition of our mind, so far inferior to that in the holy angels, that their state may be called wakefulness, ours a sleep."

2. And I said <sup>8</sup>, I have looked and behold a candlestick all of gold. The candlestick is the seven-branched candlestick of the tabernacle <sup>9</sup>, but with variations purposely introduced to symbolise the fuller and more constant supply of the oil, itself the symbol of God's Holy Spirit, Who

The text would suppose that, in the silence of the prophet, the angel-interpreter related the vision which he also saw. But this is unlike all the other cases. Kim. supposes that the prophet speaks of himself in the third person. There is the same variation in 2 Sam. i. 6, Neh. v. 9, vii. 3.

4 So I answered and spake to the angel that talked with me, saying, What are these, my lord?

5 Then the angel that talked with me answered and said unto me, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord.

6 Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, 'Not by || might, nor † by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.

The first variation is her bowl <sup>10</sup> on the top of the candlestick, containing the oil; then (as dependent on this) the pipes to derive the oil into each lamp, seven several <sup>11</sup> pipes to the seven lamps, i. e., seven to each; and the two olive trees on either side of the bowl, whose extreme and fine branches poured through two golden pipes the golden oil into the bowl which supplied the lamps. The multiplied conduits imply the large and perfect supply of oil unceasingly supplied, the seven being symbolic of perfection or of the reconciling of God (symbolised by 3) unto the world (symbolised by 4, its four quarters); the spontaneous flow of the golden oil from the olive trees symbolises the free gift of God.

4. "Awakened from his state of sleep, even thus the prophet seemed slowly to understand what was shewn him. He asks then of the instructing angel. The angel, almost amazed, asks if he knows it not, and when he plainly declares his ignorance, makes clear the enigma of the vision."

6. This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel. "As if he were to say, the meaning of the vision and scope of what has been exhibited is, 'God's doings have almost cried aloud to Zerubbabel that all these visions shall come to an end in their time, not effected by human might nor in fleshly strength, but in power of the Holy Ghost and through Divine Will.' For the Only Begotten became Man as we: but He warred not after the flesh, to set up the Church as a candlestick to the world, nor did He, through sensible weapons and armed phalanxes, make those two people His own, or place the spiritual lights on the candlestick; but in the might of His own Spirit He appointed in the Church <sup>12</sup> first Apostles, then prophets and evangelists, and all the rest of the saintly band, filling them with Divine gifts and enriching them abundantly by the influx of His Spirit."

"Not then in great power nor in fleshly might were the things of Christ, but in power of the Spirit was Satan spoiled, and the ranks of the adverse powers fell with him; and Israel and those who aforetime served the creature rather than the Creator, were called to the knowledge of

7 Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the headstone

God through faith. But that He saved all under heaven, not by human arm, but by His own power as God Emmanuel, Hosca too protested<sup>1</sup>, I will have mercy upon the house of Judah and will save them by the Lord their God, and will not save them by bow nor by sword nor by battle nor by chariots nor by horses nor by horsemen. But exceeding fittingly was this said to Zerubbabel, who was of the tribe of Judah and at that time administered the royal seat at Jerusalem. For that he might not think that, since such glorious successes were fore-announced to him, wars would in their season have to be organised, he lifts him up from these unsound and human thoughts, and bids him be thus minded, that the force was divine, the might of Christ, Who should bring such things to pass, and not human."

Having given this key of the whole vision, without explaining its details, God enlarges what He had said to Zerubbabel, as He had in the preceding chapter to Joshua<sup>2</sup>.

7. Who art thou, O great mountain<sup>3</sup>? Before Zerubbabel thou shalt be a plain. The words have the character of a sacred proverb; Every one that exalteth himself shall be abased. Isaiah prophesies the victories of the Gospel in the same imagery, Every valley shall be exalted and every mountain and hill shall be made low; and the crooked shall be made straight and the rough places plain. And in the New Testament S. Paul says, The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ. As it is the character of Anti-Christ, that he opposeth and exalteth himself above every thing that is called God, so of Satan himself it had been said in the former vision, that he stood at the right hand of Joshua<sup>4</sup> to resist him. So then the mountain symbolises every resisting power; Satan and all his instruments, who, each in his turn, shall oppose himself and be brought low. In the first instance, it was Sanballat and his companions, who opposed the rebuilding of the temple, on account of the "exclusiveness" of Zerubbabel and Joshua<sup>5</sup>, because they would not make the temple the abode of a mixed worship of him whom they call your God and of their own idolatries. In all and each of his instruments, the persecuting Emperors or the heretics, it was the one adversary. <sup>10</sup>The words seem all but to rebuke the great mountain, i. e. Satan, who riseth up and leadeath against Christ the power of his own stubbornness, who was figuratively spoken of before<sup>6</sup>.—For that as far as it was allowed and in him lay, he warred fiercely against the Saviour, no one would doubt, who considered how he approached Him when fasting in the wilderness, and seeing Him saving all below, willed to make Him his own worshipper, shewing Him <sup>11</sup>all the kingdoms of the world, saying that all should be His, if He would fall down and worship him. Then out of the very choir of the holy Apostles he snatched the traitor disciple, persuading him to become the instrument of the Jewish perverseness. He asks him, Who art thou? disparaging him and making him of no account, great as the mountain was and hard to withstand, and in the way of every one who would bring about such things for Christ, of Whom, as we said, Zerubbabel was a type."

And he shall bring forth the headstone<sup>12</sup>. The foundation of the temple had long been laid. Humanly it still hung in the balance whether they would be permitted to complete it<sup>13</sup>; Zechariah foretells absolutely that they would. Two images appear to be used in Holy Scripture, both of which meet in Christ: the one, in which the stone spoken of is the foundation-stone; the other, in which it is the head corner-stone binding the two walls together, which it connects. Both were corner stones; the one at the base, the other at the summit. In Isaiah the whole emphasis is on the foundation; <sup>14</sup>Behold Me Who have laid in Zion a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, well-founded. In the Psalm, the building had been commenced; those who were building had disregarded and despised the stone, but it became the head of the corner, crowning and binding the work in one<sup>15</sup>. Both images together express, how Christ is the Beginning and the End, the First and the Last; the Foundation of the spiritual building, the Church, and its summit and completion; the unseen Foundation which was laid deep in Calvary, and the Summit to which it grows and which holds it firm together. Whence S. Peter unites the two prophecies, and blends with them that other of Isaiah, that Christ would <sup>16</sup>be a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence. To Whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men but chosen of God and precious, ye also are built up a spiritual house—Whence also it is contained in the Scripture, Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious:—unto you which believe He is precious, but unto them which be disobedient, the same stone which the builders refused is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence, to them which stumble at the word being disobedient.

A Jew paraphrases this of the Messiah; <sup>17</sup>And He shall reveal His Messiah, whose name was spoken from the beginning, and he shall rule over all nations.

With shoutings<sup>18</sup>, grace, grace unto it, i. e. all favour from God unto it, redoubled favours, grace upon grace. The completion of the building was but the commencement of the dispensation under it. It was the beginning not the end. They pray then for the continued and manifold grace of God, that He would carry on the work, which He had begun. Perseverance, by the grace of God, crowns the life of the Christian; our Lord's abiding presence in grace with His Church unto the end of the world, is the witness that He Who founded her upholds her in being.

is not addressed through 'the interpreting angel,' but direct from the Lord, and that through the 'Angel of the Lord.'<sup>1</sup> For though in the first instance the words, the hands of Zerubbabel &c., relate to the building of the material temple, and announce its completion through Zerubbabel, yet the inference, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you, shews that the meaning is not exhausted thereby, but that here too this building is mentioned only as a type of the building of the spiritual temple<sup>2</sup>; and the completion of the typical temple is but a pledge of the completion of the true temple. For not through the completion of the material temple, but only through the building of the kingdom of God, shadowed forth by it, can Judah know, that the Angel of the Lord was sent to him.<sup>3</sup>

10. The simplest rendering is marked by the accents. *For who hath despised<sup>3</sup> the day of small things<sup>4</sup>? and [i.e. seeing that<sup>5</sup>] there have rejoiced and seen the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel, these seven, the Eyes of the Lord, they are running to and fro in all the earth, i. e. since God hath with joy and good-pleasure beheld the progress of the work of Zerubbabel, who can despise the day of small things? The day of small things was not only that of the foundation of the temple, but of its continued building also. The old men indeed, that had seen the first house, wept with a loud voice, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes<sup>6</sup>. But while in progress too, Haggai asks, Who is left among you that saw this house in its first glory? And how do ye see it now? is not in your eyes such as it, as nothing? But that temple was to see the day of great things, when<sup>7</sup> the later glory of this house shall be greater than the former, and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts.*

They are the eyes of the Lord which run to and fro. He uses almost the words of the prophet Hanani to Asa<sup>8</sup>, the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to shew Himself strong in behalf of those whose heart is perfect towards Him. Yet this assurance that God's watchful Providence is over the whole earth, betokens more than the restoration of the material temple, whose only hindrance could be the will of one man, Darius.

The day of small things is especially God's day, Whose strength is made perfect in weakness; Who raised Joseph from the prison, David from the sheepfold, Daniel from slavery, and converted the world by the fishermen and the tentmaker, having Himself first become the Carpenter. "Wouldest thou be great? Become little." "Whenever," said S. Theresa<sup>10</sup>, "I am to receive some singular grace, I first annihilate myself, sink into my own nothingness, so as to seem to myself to be nothing, be capable of nothing."

11. And I answered and said. The vision, as a whole, had been explained to him. The prophet asks as to subordinate parts, which seemed perhaps inconsistent with the whole. If the whole imports that everything should be done by the Spirit of God, not by human power, what means it that there are these two olive-trees? And when the Angel returned no answer, to invite perhaps closer attention and a more definite question, he asks again;

12. What are the two spikes<sup>11</sup> of the olive? comparing the extreme branches of the olive-tree, laden with their fruit, to the ears of corn, which were by or in the hand of<sup>12</sup> the golden pipes<sup>13</sup>, which empty forth the golden oil from themselves, Zechariah's expression, in the hand of or, if so be, by the hand of the two pipes, shews that these two were symbols of living agents, for it is nowhere used except of a living agent, or of that which is personified as such<sup>14</sup>.

14. These are the two sons of oil, probably not as themselves anointed, (for another word is used for this<sup>15</sup>, and the pipes as hands, and yielded in them their oil; Raah renders "near it" like אֵלַי יָדוּ 2 Sam. xiv. 30, as יָדוּ Job xv. 23.

<sup>12</sup> This is undoubtedly the same as Ch. גִּזְרֵי Eath. (ii.) 1, 2, "tubes" אֲנִי חֲמוֹם Eccl. i. 7, Targ. in Buxt., yet larger than the כֶּסֶם, both from its etymology, and since the oil was derived through two tubes to the bowl, but by 7 × 7 = 49 to the lamps.

<sup>14</sup> Of the 276 cases besides this, in which בִּיד occurs, in three only is it used of any other than a personal agent, and in these the agent is personified; Job viii. 4, and he cast them away in the hand of their transgression; Prov. xviii. 21, death and life are in the power, lit. the hand, of the tongue; Is. lxiv. 6, thou hast made us to melt away by the hand of our iniquities. With regard to בִּידָה, this could not be otherwise; but also in the 92 cases in which בִּידָה occurs, in which בִּידָה occurs, the pronoun relates to a personal agent.

It is a contrast; in which case the word, in which the contrast lies, is placed first, whether noun or verb. Here the contrast being between "despising" and "rejoicing," מִקְדָּשׁ is placed first. So in Pa. v. 12, וְיַיִן, Ib. xxv. 8, all that trust in Thee shall not be ashamed; ashamed be they who &c.; Pa. xxxviii. 17. ## CHAPTER V.

whole vision has turned on the use of oil as an instrument of light, not of anointing) but as themselves abundantly ministering the stream which is the source of light<sup>1</sup>.

Which stand by the Lord of the whole earth, as His servants and ministers.

The candlestick is almost authoritatively interpreted for us, by the adoption of the symbol in the Revelation, where our Lord is exhibited as walking in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, and, it is said, the seven candlesticks are the seven Churches; and our Lord says to the Apostles, on whom He founded the Church; Ye are the light of the world: men light a candle, and put it on a candlestick, and it giveth light to them that are in the house.

<sup>2</sup> "The golden candlestick is the Church, as being honoured in the world, most bright in virtues, raised on high exceedingly by the doctrines of the true knowledge of God. But there are seven lamps, having light, not of their own, but brought to them from without, and nourished by the supplies through the olive tree. These signify the holy Apostles, Evangelists, and those who, each in their season, were teachers of the Churches, receiving, like lamps, into their mind and heart the illumination from Christ, which is nourished by the supplies of the Spirit, casting forth light to those who are in the house." <sup>3</sup> "The pipes of the lamps, which pour in the oil, signify the unstinted prodigality of the loving-kindness of God to man."

The most difficult of explanation (as is plain from the variety of interpretations) is this last symbol of the spikes of the olive-tree, through whom flows the oil of the Holy Spirit to the candlesticks, and which yet represent created beings, ministers, and servants of God. Perhaps it represents that, in the Church, grace is ministered through men, as S. Paul says, Unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith, when He ascended up on high, He led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men. And He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ—that we—may grow up into Him in all things which is the Head, even Christ, from Whom the whole body, fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love. What S. Paul expresses by all the body, having nourishment ministered and being knit together by joints and bands, from the Head, and so increasing with the increase of God, (as he elsewhere speaks of the ministration of the Spirit; <sup>10</sup> he that ministereth to you the Spirit) that Zechariah may express by the oil being poured, through the living <sup>11</sup> tubes, the bowl, the sevenfold pipes, into the lamps, which shone with the God-given light. So S. Paul speaks again, of <sup>12</sup> having this treasure in earthen vessels.

cir. 519.

THEN I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold a flying <sup>a</sup> roll. * Ezek. 2. 9.

Joshua and Zerubbabél, as representatives of the priestly and royal offices, shadowed forth what was united in Christ, and so, in their several offices, they might be included in the symbol of the olive-tree: they could not exhaust it; for men who, having served God in their generation, were to pass away, could not be alone intended in a vision, which describes the abiding being of the Church.

<sup>13</sup> Christ is both All-holy Priest and supreme Eternal King. In both ways He supplies to us the light which He brought. For from Him piety and righteousness flow unceasingly to the Church, that it never lack the heavenly light. The oil is expressed into tubes; thence passed through pipes into the vessel which contains the lamps; to designate the various suppliers of light, which, the nearer they are to the effluence of the oil, the more they resemble Him by Whom they are appointed to so Divine an office. The seven lamps are the manifold Churches, distinct in place but most closely bound together by the consent of one faith and by the bond of charity. For although the Church is one, yet it is distinct according to the manifold variety of nations. They are said to be seven, both on account of the seven gifts of the Spirit, mentioned by Isaiah, and because in the numbers 3 and 4, is contained an emblem of piety and righteousness. There are 7 pipes to each lamp, to signify that each has need of many instruments, that the light may be maintained longer. For as there are diversities of gifts, so must there needs be the functions of many ministers, to complete one work. But the lamps are set in a circle, that the oil of one may flow more readily into others, and it, in turn, may receive from others their superabundance, to set forth the communion of love and the indissoluble community of faith."

v. 1. Hitherto all had been bright, full of the largeness of the gifts of God; of God's favour to His people<sup>14</sup>; the removal of their enemies<sup>15</sup>; the restoration and expansion and security of God's people and Church under His protection<sup>16</sup>; the acceptance of the present typical priesthood and the promise of Him, through Whom there should be entire forgiveness<sup>17</sup>; the abiding illumining of the Church by the Spirit of God<sup>18</sup>. Yet there is a reverse side to all this, God's judgements on those who reject all His mercies. <sup>19</sup> "Prophecies partly appertain to those in whose times the sacred writers prophesied, partly to the mysteries of Christ. And therefore it is the wont of the prophets, at one time to chastise vices and set forth punishments, at another to predict the mysteries of Christ and the Church."

And I turned and, or, Again <sup>20</sup> I lifted up my eyes, having again sunk down in meditation on what he had seen, and behold a roll flying; as, to Ezekiel was shewn a hand with a roll of a book therein, and he spread it before me. Ezekiel's roll also was <sup>21</sup> written within and without, and there was written therein lamentation and mourning and woe. It was a wide unfolded roll, as is involved in its flying; but its

2. And he (the interpreting angel) said unto me. It cannot be without meaning, that the dimensions of the roll should be those of the tabernacle<sup>2</sup>, as the last vision was that of the candlestick, after the likeness of the candlestick therein. The explanations of this correspondence do not exclude each other. It may be that <sup>3</sup>judgement shall begin at the house of God; that the punishment on sin is proportioned to the nearness of God and the knowledge of Him; that the presence of God, which was for life, might also be to death, as S. Paul says; <sup>4</sup>God maketh manifest the savour of this knowledge by us in every place; for we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ in them that are saved and in them that perish; to the one we are the savour of death unto death, and to the other the savour of life unto life; and Simeon said, <sup>5</sup>This child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel.

Over the face of the whole earth, primarily land, since the perjured persons, upon whom the curse was to fall<sup>6</sup>, were those who swore falsely by the name of God: and this was in Judah only. The reference to the two tables of the law also confines it primarily to those who were under the law. Yet, since the moral law abides under the Gospel, ultimately these visions related to the Christian Church, which was to be spread over the whole earth. The roll apparently was shewn, as written on both sides; the commandments of the first table, in which perjury is forbidden, on the one side; those relating to the love of our neighbour, in which stealing is forbidden, on the other<sup>7</sup>. <sup>8</sup>He calleth curse that vengeance, which goeth through the whole world, and is brought upon the workers of iniquity. But hereby both prophets and people were taught, that the God of all is the judge of all men, and will exact meet punishment of all, bringing utter destruction not on those only who live ungodly towards Himself, but on those also who are unjust to their neighbours. For let no one think that this threat was only against thieves and false-swearers; for He gave sentence against all iniquity. For <sup>2</sup> The length of the tabernacle is fixed by the 5 curtains which were to be on each side, the breadth of each curtain four cubits. Exod. xxvi. 1, 2. The whole, including the holy of holies, is determined by the twenty boards on each side, a cubit and a half, the breadth of each board; 1b. 16, 18. The breadth is fixed by the six boards, i. e. nine cubits, with the two boards for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides. 1b. 22, 23. Josephus gives the whole thirty cubits long, (the holy of holies being ten cubits square) ten broad (Ant. 3. 6. 3.). Kimchi strangely neglects this, and refers to the porch of Solomon's temple, in which the dimensions of the tabernacle were repeated (1 Kgs vi. 8.), but which was itself only an ornament to the temple.

5 ¶ Then the angel that talked with me went forth, and said unto me, Lift up now thine eyes, and see what is this that goeth forth.

6 And I said, What is it? And he said, This is an ephah that goeth forth. He said moreover, This is their resemblance answer, "since death awaits too the man, who keeps the oath; yet Oath hath a son, nameless, handless, footless; but swift he pursueth, until he grasp together and destroy the whole race and house." "In the third generation, there was nought descended from him," who had consulted about this perjury, "nor hearthstone reputed to be his. It had been uprooted and effaced." A Heathen orator<sup>2</sup> relates, as well known, that "the perjurer escapes not the vengeance of the gods, and if not himself, yet the sons and whole race of the forsworn fall into great misfortunes." God left not Himself without witness.

"The prophet speaks of the curse inflicted on the thieves and false swearers of his own day; but à fortiori he includes that which came upon them for slaying Christ. For this was the greatest of all, which utterly overthrew and consumed Jerusalem, the temple and polity, so that that ancient and glorious Jerusalem exists no longer, as Christ threatened. <sup>4</sup>They shall lay thee even with the ground, and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another. This resteth upon them these" 1800 "years."

5. Then the angel went forth from the choirs of angels, among whom, in the interval, he had retired, as before<sup>5</sup> he had gone forth to meet another angel.

6. This is the ephah that goeth forth. "We too are taught by this, that the Lord of all administers all things in weight and measure. So, foretelling to Abraham that his seed should be a sojourner and the cause thereof, He says, <sup>7</sup>for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full, i. e., they have not yet committed sins enough to merit entire destruction, wherefore I cannot yet endure to give them over to the slaughter, but will wait for the measure of their iniquity." The relation then of this vision to the seventh is, that the seventh tells of God's punishment on individual sinners; this, on the whole people, when the iniquity of the whole is full.

This is their resemblance, as we say, their look<sup>8</sup>, i. e. the look, appearance, of the inhabitants <sup>9</sup>in all the land. This then being the condition of the people of the land, at the time to which the vision relates, the symbolical carrying away of the full measure of sin cannot be its forgiveness, since there was no repentance, but the taking away of the sin with the sinner. "The Lord of all is good and loving to mankind; for He is patient towards sinners and endures transgressors, waiting for the repentance of each; but if one perseveres long in iniquity, and come to the term of the endurance allowed, it remains that he should be subjected to punishment, and there is no account of this long forbearance, nor can he be exempt from judgement proportioned to what he has done. So then Christ says to the Jewish people, rushing with unbridled phrenzy to all strange excess, <sup>11</sup>Fill ye up the measure of your fathers. The measure then, which was seen, pointed to the filling up of the measure of the transgression of the people against Himself. "The angel bids him behold the sins of the people Israel, heaped together in a perfect measure, and the transgression of all fulfilled—that the sins, which escaped notice, one by one, might, when collected together, be laid open to the eyes of all, and Israel might go forth from its place, and it might be shewn to all what she was in her own land." "I think the Lord alluded to the words of the prophet, as though He would say, Fill up the measure of sins which your fathers began of old, as it is in Zechariah, i. e. ye will soon fill it; for ye so haste to do evil, that ye will soon fill it to the utmost."

7. And behold there was lifted up a talent of lead, the heaviest Hebrew weight, elsewhere of gold or silver; the golden talent weighing, 1,300,000 grains; the silver, 660,000; here, being lead, it is obviously an undefined mass, though circular<sup>14</sup>, corresponding to the Ephah. The Ephah too was the largest Hebrew measure, whose compass cannot now, with certainty, be ascertained<sup>15</sup>. Both probably were, in the vision, ideal. "Holy Scripture calleth the punishment of sin, lead, as being by nature heavy. This the divine David teacheth us, <sup>16</sup>mine iniquities are gone over my head: as an heavy burden, they are too heavy for me. The divine Zechariah seeth sin under the image of a woman; for most evils are engendered by luxury. But he seeth the punishment, like most heavy lead, lying upon the mouth of iniquity, according to a Psalm, <sup>17</sup>all iniquity shall stop her mouth." "Iniquity, as with a talent of lead, weighs down the conscience."

This is a woman, lit. one woman, all sin being concentrated and personified in one, as he goes on to speak of her as the, personified, wickedness<sup>18</sup>. The sitting may represent her abiding tranquil condition in her sins, according to the climax in the first Psalm, <sup>19</sup>and hath not sat in the seat of the scornful; and, <sup>20</sup>thou sittest and speakest against thy brother; "not standing as by the way, but sitting, as if of set purpose, of wont and habit." "Whoso hath peace in sins is not far from lying down in them, so that, oppressed by a spirit of slumber, he neither sees light, nor feels any blow, but is kept down by the leaden talent of his obduracy."

8. And cast her into the midst of the Ephah. As yet then the measure was not full. "She had the lower part within the Ephah, but the upper, especially the head, without. Though the Jews had slain the prophets and done many grievous things, the greatest sin of all remained to be done. But when they had crucified Christ and persecuted the Apostles and the Gospel, the measure was full; she was wholly within the Ephah, no part remained without, so that the measure was filled."

And he cast the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof, i. e. doubtless of the Ephah; as in Genesis <sup>1</sup>, a great stone was on the mouth of the well, so that there should be no access to it.

9. There came out two women. It may be that there may be no symbol herein, but that he names women because it was a woman who was so carried; yet their wings were the wings of an unclean bird, strong, powerful, borne by a force not their own; with their will, since they flew; beyond their will, since the wind was in their wings; rapidly, inexorably, irresistibly, they flew and bore the Ephah between heaven and earth. No earthly power could reach or rescue it. God would not. It may be that evil spirits are symbolised, as being like to this personified human wickedness, such as snatch away the souls of the damned, who, by serving them, have become as they.

11. To build it an house in the land of Shinar. The name of Shinar, though strictly Babylonia, carries back to an older power than the world-empire of Babylon; which now too was destroyed. In the land of Shinar <sup>2</sup> was that first attempt to array a world-empire against God, ere mankind was yet dispersed. And so it is the apter symbol of the antithetic or Anti-Christian world, which by violence, art, falsehood, sophistry, wars against the truth. To this great world-empire it was to be removed; yet to live there, no longer cramped and confined as within an Ephah, but in pomp and splendour. A house or temple was to be built for it, for its honour and glory; as Dagon <sup>3</sup> or Ashtarothe <sup>4</sup>, or Baal <sup>5</sup> had their houses or temples, a great idol temple, in which the god of this world should be worshipped.

And it—"the house," shall be established firmly on its base, like the house of God, and it, (wickedness <sup>6</sup>) shall be tranquilly rested on its base, as an idol in its temple, until the end come. In the end, the belief of those of old was, that the Jews would have great share in the antagonism to Christ and His empire. At the first, they were the great enemies of the faith, and sent forth, S. Justin says <sup>7</sup>, those everywhere who should circulate the calumnies against Christians, which were made a ground of early persecutions. In the end, it was believed, that Anti-Christ should be from them, that they would receive him as their Christ, the last fulfilment of our Lord's words, <sup>8</sup> I am come in My Father's name and ye receive Me not; another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive.

VI. 1. Behold, four chariots going forth <sup>9</sup> "by the secret disposal of God into the theatre of the world," from between two mountains of brass. Both Jews <sup>10</sup> and Christians have seen that the four chariots relate to the same four empires, as the visions in Daniel. "The two mountains." It may be that the imagery is from the two mountains on either side of the valley of Jehoshaphat, which Joel had spoken of as the place of God's judgement <sup>11</sup>, and Zechariah afterwards <sup>12</sup>. It may then picture that the judgements go forth from God. Any how the powers, symbolised by the four chariots, are pictured as closed in on either side by these mountains, strong as brass, unsurmountable, undecaying, <sup>13</sup> that they should not go forth to other lands to conquer, until the time should come, fixed by the counsels of God, when the gates should be opened for their going forth." The mountains of brass may signify the height of the Divine wisdom ordering this, and the sublimity of the power which putteth them in operation; as the Psalmist says, <sup>14</sup> Thy righteousnesses are like the mountains of God.

2. 3. The symbol is different from that in the first vision. There <sup>15</sup>, they were horses only, with their riders, to go to and fro to enquire; here they are war-chariots with their horses, to execute God's judgements, each in their turn. In the first vision also, there is not the characteristic fourfold division, which reminds of the four world-empires of Daniel <sup>16</sup>; after which, in both prophets, is the mention of the kingdom of Christ. Even if the grised horses be the

The characteristic of the act is, that the crown or crowns (it is not in the context said, which) were placed on the head of the one high priest, Joshua; and thou shalt place [it or them, it is not said which] upon the head of Joshua son of Josedech the high-priest, and shalt say unto him. If crowns were made of each material, there were two crowns. But this is not said, and the silver might have formed a circlet in the crown of gold, as, in modern times, the iron crown of Lombardy, was called iron, because it had "a plate of iron in its summit, being else of gold and most precious." In any case the symbolical act was completed by the placing of a royal crown upon the head of the high-priest. This, in itself, represented that He, Whom he and all other priests represented, would be also our King. It is all one then, whether the word designate one single crown, so entitled for its greatness, or one united royal crown, i. e., one crown uniting many crowns, symbolising the many kingdoms of the earth, over which our High Priest and King should rule. Either symbol, of separate crowns<sup>7</sup>, or an united crown<sup>8</sup>, has been used in the same meaning, to symbolise as many empires, as there were crowns.

On Zerubbabel no crown was placed. It would have been confusing; a seeming restoration of the kingdom, when it was not to be restored; an encouragement of the temporal hopes, which were the bane of Israel. God had foretold, that none of the race of Jehoiakim should prosper, sitting on the throne of David, or ruling any more in Israel. Nehemiah rejects the imputation of Sanballat<sup>9</sup>, Thou hast also appointed prophets to preach of thee at Jerusalem, There is a king in Judah. He answers, There are no such things done as thou sayest; and thou feignest them out of thine own heart. But Isaiah had foretold much of the king who should reign: Zechariah, by placing the royal crown on the head of Joshua, foreshewed that the kingdom was not to be of this world. The royal crown had been taken away in the time of Zedekiah, <sup>10</sup> Thus saith the Lord God, Remove the diadem and take away the crown; this shall not be this; exalt the low and abase the high; an overthrow, overthrow, overthrow will I make it; this too is not; until he come whose the right is, and I will give it.

But the Messiah, it was foretold, was to be both priest and king; <sup>11</sup> a priest after the order of Melchizedec, and a king, set by the Lord <sup>12</sup> upon His holy hill of Zion. The act of placing the crown on the head of Joshua the high-priest, pictured not only the union of the offices of priest and king in the person of Christ, but that He should be King, being first our High Priest. Joshua was already High Priest; being such, the kingly crown was added to him. It says in act, what S. Paul says, that <sup>13</sup> Christ Jesus, being found in fashion as a man, humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him.

12. The Prophet is taught to explain his own symbolic act. Behold the Man whose name is the Branch<sup>14</sup>. "Not for himself, but for Christ, Whose name Joshua bare, and Whose Priesthood and Principedom he represented," was the crown given him. The Prophet had already foretold the Messiah, under the name of the Branch. Here he adds, Otto of Frisingen said that Frederic received 5 crowns; the first at Aix for the kingdom of the Franks, a second at Ratisbon for that of Germany; a third at Pavia for the kingdom of Lombardy; the fourth at Rome for the Roman empire from Adrian iv; the fifth of Monza for the kingdom of Italy." In our own memory, Napoleon I. having been crowned in France, was crowned with the iron crown at Monza.

<sup>9</sup> "The headdress of the king, on state occasions, was the crown of the upper or of the lower country, or the phent, the union of the two. Every king, after the sovereignty of the Thebaid and lower Egypt had become once more vested in the same person, put on this double crown at his coronation, and we find in the grand representation given of this ceremony at Medinet Haboo that the principal feature of the proclamation, on his ascension to the throne, was the announcement that Remeses had put on the crown of the upper and lower country.—When crowned, the king invariably put on the two crowns at the same time, though on other occasions he was permitted to wear each separately, whether in the temple, the city, or the field of battle." <sup>15</sup> The consent of the ancient Jews in interpreting "the Branch" of the Messiah is very remarkable. "R. Berachiah (about A. D. 200, Wolf. Bibl. Hebr. ii. 870) said, that 'God, blessed for ever, saith to Israel, Ye say before Me, we have become orphans and have no father; the Redeemer too, Whom I am about to make to stand from you, He shall have no father, as is said, Behold the Man Whose name is the Branch, and he shall shoot [lit. from below him] from his place; and so saith Isaiah, And he grew up like a sucker before him.'" (Bereshith Rabba on Gen. xxxvii. 22, in Martini Pug. Fid. f. 594 quoted also by a Jewish convert, Joshua Hailorki, known among us as Hieron. de S. Fide, c. Jud. i. 5. Bibl. Max. Patr. xxvi. 536). His quotation is independent of Martini, since he adds the quotation from Ps. ii. "and elsewhere, 'The Lord said unto me, Thou art my Son,'" Jon. paraphrases, "Behold a Man, Whose name is Messiah, Who shall be revealed, and shall be multiplied," (יִרְמִיָּהוּ, by which גִּזְרִית is rendered Ps. lxxxv. 12.) "and he shall build the temple of the Lord, and he shall bear glory, and he shall sit and shall rule on his throne, and he shall be a great Priest on his throne, and counsel of peace there shall be between them both." Rashi says, "He hints at the Messiah, and so paraphrases Jonathan, Behold a Man Whose name is Messiah, &c." (in Mart. p. 376. The printed edd. substitute "And some interpret it of king Messiah.") R. Nachman observes on the force of the word man, "Man (in Nu. i. 4.) is not said here but of the Messiah the Son of David, as is said, 'Behold the Man, Whose name is the Branch,' Jonathan paraphrases The Man Messiah, and so it is said, 'a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief.'" (Mart. p. 664). The Echa Rabati, f. 69, 2, and Jerus. Bereshith f. 1, 1, quote R. Joshua B. Levi (end of 2nd cent., Wolf. B. H. ii. 842, coll. pp. 834, 841) as alleging this place in proof that "Branch is a name of the Messiah." Schottgen [ad loc.] Schottgen quotes also the Pirke Eliezer c. 38, "God will free Israel at the end of the 4th kingdom, saying, I have put forth a germ unto you, Behold my servant the Branch." Baunmidbar R. sect. 18 f. 236, 1, Tanchuma f. 68, 3. "Behold the Man, whose name is the Branch. This is the Messiah, of Whom it is said (Jer. xxiii. 5.) And I will raise up unto David a righteous Branch." Midrash Mishle xix. 21 f. 57, 1, quotes, "R. Huna (3rd cent.) said, The name of Messiah is Branch, as in, 'Behold a man.'" Ib. After all this Kimchi says, "Some interpret it of king Messiah."

the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and Jesus Himself said, <sup>1</sup> Except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. Alone He grew up before God, as a tender plant<sup>2</sup>, unknown of man, known to God. It is that still, Divine life at Nazareth, of which we see only that one bright flash in the temple, the deep saying, understood even by Joseph and Mary, and then, <sup>3</sup> He went down with them and came to Nazareth and was subject unto them.

And he shall build the temple of the Lord. The material temple was soon to be finished, and that by Zerubbabel, to whom this had been promised<sup>4</sup>, not by Joshua. It was then a new temple, to be built from the foundation, of which He Himself was to be the foundation<sup>5</sup>, as He said, <sup>6</sup> On this rock I will build My Church; and in Him<sup>7</sup> all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple to the Lord. <sup>8</sup> He it is, Who built the house; for neither Solomon nor Zerubbabel nor Joshua son of Josedeck could build a house worthy of the majesty of God. For<sup>9</sup> the most High, S. Stephen says, dwelleth not in temples made with hands, as saith the prophet; Heaven is My throne and earth is My footstool; what house will ye build Me, saith the Lord? For if they could have built a house for God, He would not have allowed His house to be burned and overthrown. What then is the house of God which Christ built? The Church, founded on faith in Him, dedicated by His Blood, established by the stayedness of Divine virtue, adorned with Divine and eternal riches, wherein the Lord ever dwelleth."

13. Even He, lit. He Himself<sup>10</sup>. The repetition shews, that it is a great thing, which He affirms; and He, again emphatic, He, the same who shall build the temple of the Lord, He shall bear the glory. Great must be the glory, since it is affirmed of Him as of none besides, "He shall bear glory," "He should build the temple of the Lord," as none besides ever built it; He should bear glory, as none besides ever bare it, <sup>11</sup> the glory as of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. This word glory is almost always used of the special glory of God<sup>12</sup>, and then, although seldom, of the Majesty of those, on whom God confers majesty as His representatives, as Moses, or Joshua<sup>13</sup>, or the glory of the kingdom given to Solomon<sup>14</sup>. It is used also of Him, a likeness of Whom these vice-gerents of God bare, in a Psalm whose language belongs (as Jews too have seen,) to One more than man<sup>15</sup>, although also of glory given by God, either of grace or nature<sup>16</sup>. So in our Lord's great High Priest's prayer He says, <sup>17</sup> Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was; and prays, <sup>18</sup> that they also whom Thou hast given Me, be with Me, where I am; that they may behold My glory which Thou hast given Me. So S. Paul, applying the words of the eighth Psalm, says of our Lord, <sup>19</sup> We see Jesus, Who was made a little lower than the angels, crowned with glory and honour; and the angels and saints round the Throne

say, <sup>20</sup> Worthy is the Lamb which was slain to receive power and wisdom and strength and honour and glory and blessing, and those on earth answer, Blessing and honour and glory and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the Throne and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. That glory Isaiah saw<sup>21</sup>; in His miracles He manifested forth His glory<sup>22</sup>, which resided in Him; in His Transfiguration, the three Apostles saw His glory<sup>23</sup>, shining out from within Him; into this His glory<sup>24</sup>, He told the disciples at Emmaus, the prophets said, that He was to enter, having first suffered what He suffered; in this His glory He is to sit, when He judges<sup>25</sup>. And He shall sit and rule on His Throne. His rule shall be, not passing but abiding, not by human might, but in peaceful majesty, as God says, <sup>26</sup> Yet have I set My king upon My holy hill of Zion, and again, <sup>27</sup> Sit Thou on My Right Hand, until I make Thine enemies Thy footstool; and the angel said to Mary, <sup>28</sup> The Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David, and He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of His kingdom there shall be no end.

And He shall be a priest upon His Throne. He shall be at once king and priest, as it is said, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedec. When the Christ should reign, He should not cease to be our Priest. He, having all power given to Him in heaven and in earth, reigneth over His Church and His elect by His grace, and over the world by His power, yet ever liveth to make intercession for us. <sup>29</sup> Not dwelling now on what is chiefest, that <sup>30</sup> by Him were all things created, that are in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions or principalities or powers; all things were created by Him and for Him, and He is before all things, and by Him all things consist, how many crowns of glory belong to Him, One and the Same, God and Man, Christ Jesus! He then will bear glory and will sit upon His throne and shall be a priest on His throne. How just this is, it is easier to think than to express, that He should sit and rule all things, by Whom all things were made, and He should be a Priest for ever, by Whose Blood all things are reconciled. He shall rule then upon His throne, and He shall be a priest upon His throne, which cannot be said of any of the saints, because it is the right of none of them, to call the throne of his rule or of his priesthood his own, but of this Only Lord and Priest, Whose majesty and throne are one and the same with the Majesty of God, as He saith, <sup>31</sup> When the Son of Man shall come in His Majesty [Glory], then shall He sit upon the throne of His Majesty [Glory]. And what meaneth that re-duplication, and He shall rule on His Throne, but that One and the Same, of Whom all this is said, should be and is King and Priest. He Who is King shall rule on His Throne, because kingdom and priesthood shall meet in One Person, and One shall occupy the double throne of kingdom and priesthood.<sup>32</sup> He Alone should be our King; He Alone our Saviour: He Alone the Object of our love, obedience and adoration.

cir. 519. and the counsel of peace shall be between them both.

14 And the crowns shall be to Helem,

And the counsel of peace shall be between them both. The counsel of peace is not merely peace, as S. Jerome seems to interpret: "He is both king and priest, and shall sit both on the royal and sacerdotal throne, and there shall be peaceful counsel between both, so that neither should the royal eminence depress the dignity of the priesthood, nor the dignity of the priesthood, the royal eminency, but both should be consistent in the glory of the One Lord Jesus." For had this been all, the simple idiom, there shall be peace between them, would have been used here, as elsewhere<sup>1</sup>. But counsel of peace, must, according to the like idioms<sup>2</sup>, signify "a counsel devising or procuring peace" for some other than those who counsel thereon. We have the idiom itself, counsellors of peace<sup>3</sup>.

They twain might be said of things<sup>4</sup>: but things are naturally not said to counsel, so that the meaning should be, that the thrones of the priests and of the Branch should counsel. For the throne is in each case merely subordinate. It is not as we might say, "the See of Rome," or "of Constantinople," or "of Canterbury," meaning the successive Bishops. It is simply the material throne, on which He sits. Nor is any thing said of any throne of a priest, nor had a priest any throne. His office was to stand before the Lord<sup>5</sup>, his intercessorial office to offer gifts and sacrifices for sin. To offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins and then for the people's, was his special office and honour. There are then not two thrones. One sits on His Throne, as King and Priest. It seems only to remain, that the counsel of peace should be between Jesus and the Father; as S. Jerome says, "I read in the book of some, that this, there shall be a peaceful counsel between the two, is referred to the Father and the Son, because He came to do not His own will, but the Will of the Father, and the Father is in the Son, and the Son in the Father." In Christ all is perfect harmony. There is a counsel of peace between Him and the Father Whose temple He builds. The Will of the Father and the Son is one. Both had one Will of love towards us, the salvation of the world, bringing forth peace through our redemption. God the Father<sup>10</sup> so loved the world, that He gave His Only-Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life; and God the Son<sup>11</sup> is our peace, Who hath made both one, that He might reconcile both unto God in one body by the Cross, and came and preached peace to them which were afar off and to them that were nigh. Others seem to me less naturally to interpret it of Christ in His two offices. "There shall be the counsel of peace between them, the ruler and the priest, not that Christ is divided, but that those two principedoms, which were hitherto divided, (the priest and the king being different persons) should be united in the One Christ. Between these two principedoms, being inseparably joined in one, shall be the counsel of peace, because through that union we have peace; and through Him<sup>13</sup> it pleased the Father to reconcile all things unto Himself, and that all things should be brought to peace through the Blood of His cross, whether things in earth or things in heaven."

14. And the crowns shall be to Helem. There is no ground apparent to us, why the name Helem appears instead of Holdai<sup>14</sup>, or Hen for Josiah: yet the same person must have been called both Hen and Josiah, since the father's name is the same in both places. They cannot both be intended as explanations of the former names, since Helem stands insulated in Hebrew, its meaning conjectural<sup>15</sup>. Perhaps then they were the own names of the individuals, and the names compounded with the name of God, honourable names which they had taken.

For a memorial in the temple of the Lord. They brought a passing gift, but it should be for a lasting memorial in their behalf. It is a renewal of the well-known term of the law<sup>16</sup>. The two stones, engraven with the names of the children of Israel, upon the shoulders of the Ephod, were to the end, that Aaron should bear their names before the Lord upon his two shoulders for a memorial<sup>17</sup>; continually, it is added of the breastplate with its twelve precious stones<sup>18</sup>; the atonement money of the children of Israel was to be appointed for the service of the tabernacle of the congregation, that it may be a memorial for the children of Israel before the Lord, to make atonement for their souls<sup>19</sup>; to make an atonement for their souls before the Lord. They were to blow with the trumpets over their burnt-offerings, and over the sacrifice of their peace-offerings, that they may be to you for a memorial before your God<sup>20</sup>. When Midian had been smitten before Israel, and not one of Israel had been slain, they brought all the gold which had accrued to them, and Moses and Eleazar took the gold, and brought it into the tabernacle, a memorial for the children of Israel before the Lord<sup>21</sup>. So the angel said to Cornelius, thy prayers and thy alms are come up for a memorial before God. "This is what we look for, that to all the saints and friends of God, whom these signify, those crowns which they made of their gold and silver for the Lord Jesus, shall be an everlasting memorial in that heavenly temple of the Lord." The tradition of the Jews, that this was literally observed<sup>22</sup>, can hardly be without foundation. "These their offerings shall be for grace to those who in S. Jerome's time identified the three with Ananias Azarias and Misael, and Hen, "grace" with Daniel.

And they who are far off shall come. They who came from Babylon with offerings to God, became types of the Gentiles, of whom the Apostle says, <sup>1</sup> Now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off have become nigh through the blood of Christ; and, <sup>2</sup> He came and preached peace to you which were far off and to them that were nigh; and <sup>3</sup> the promise is to you and to your children, and to all that are far off, as many as the Lord our God shall call.

And build in, or upon, the temple of the Lord<sup>4</sup>, not "build it" for it was to be built by the Branch, but build on, labour on, it. It was a building, which should continually be enlarged; of which S. Paul says, <sup>5</sup> I, as a wise master-builder, according to the grace given unto me, laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon; let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. "<sup>6</sup> What shall they build? Themselves, compacting themselves with the saints, and joining together in faith to oneness with those of Israel, Jesus Christ Himself being the head corner-stone and uniting together in harmony through Himself, what was of old divided. For He united the two peoples into one new man, making peace, and reconciling in His own Body all things unto the Father, which being accomplished, we shall own the truth of the holy prophets, and know clearly that it was God Who spake in them and declared to us beforehand the mystery of Christ."

15. And this shall be; not as though the coming of Christ depended upon their faithfulness, but their share in it. Ye shall know (he had said) that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you; but whether this knowledge should reach to individuals, depends upon their obedience and their willingness to know; it shall be, if ye will diligently obey the voice of the Lord your God. For none of the wicked, Daniel says<sup>9</sup>, shall understand; and Hosea, <sup>10</sup> *Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them? AND it came to pass in the fourth year of king Darius, that the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah in the fourth day of the ninth month, even in Chisleu;

2 When they had sent unto the house of God Sherezzer and Regem-melech, and will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of Myself; <sup>13</sup> He that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not because ye are not of God: <sup>14</sup> Every one that is of the truth heareth My voice. "<sup>15</sup> Because he had said, And ye shall know that the Lord hath sent me unto you, he warns them, that the fruit of that coming will reach to those only, who should hear God and with ardent mind join themselves to His name. For as many as believed in Him were made sons of God; but the rest were cast into outer darkness. But they receive Christ, who hear His voice and do not refuse His rule. For He was made the cause of eternal salvation to all who obey Him."

VII. 1. In the fourth year of Darius. Two years after the series of visions, shewn to him, and two years before the completion of the temple. Chisleu being December, it was the end of B.C. 518.

When they had sent unto the house of God. Rather, And Bethel sent; i.e. the inhabitants of Bethel sent. The house of God is nowhere in Holy Scripture called Bethel. Bethel is always the name of the place<sup>16</sup>. The house of God is designated by historians, Psalmists, prophets, by the name, Beth-elohim, more commonly Beth-Ha-elohim, the God; or of the Lord, יְהוָה<sup>17</sup>. Zechariah and Haggai use these names. It is not likely that the name, Beth-el, should have first been given to the house of God, when it had been desecrated by the idolatries of Jeroboam. Bethel also is, in the Hebrew order of the words, naturally the subject<sup>18</sup>. Nor is there any reason why they should have sent to Bethel, since they sought an answer from God. For it would be forced to say that they sent to Bethel, in order that those at Bethel should send to Jerusalem; which is not said. It were unnatural also that the name of the sender should not have been mentioned, when the names of persons inferior, because sent, are recorded<sup>19</sup>. Bethel, in Nehemiah's time<sup>20</sup>, was one of the chief places of Benjamin. Two hundred twenty and three of the men of Bethel and Ai<sup>21</sup> had returned with Zerubbabel. The answer being to the people of the land, such were doubtless the enquirers, not those still in Babylon. The answer shews that the question was not religious, though put as matter of religion. It is remarkable that, whereas in the case of those who brought presents from Babylon, the names express some in all 5; and בֵּית הָאֱלֹהִים in Eccl. iv. 17; in Chronicles, 33 times (intermingled with בֵּית); Daniel i. 2; Ezra, 7 times; Nehemiah, 8 times; in all 50.

<sup>16</sup> So Ibn Ezra, although regarding Bethel as the name of a man, who sent the others. Rashi and S. Jerome's Hebrew instructors made Sherezzer and Regemmelech the senders. Rashi says that they sent to their kinsmen in Bethel, that these should come to entreat the face of God at Jerusalem. S. Jerome's teachers said more naturally, that "Sherezzer and Regemmelech sent to the house of God;" only "Bethel" is not so used, and the theory that they were "Persian officers of Darius fearing God," is inconsistent with the question as to a Jewish political fast of long standing. The interposition of the place whither they were sent, between the verb and the subject, without any mark that it is not the subject, would be unnatural. The E. V. follows Kimchi, taking יִשְׂרָאֵל as impersonal. But here it is a formal message from some definite person or persons. In Gen. xlviii. 1, יִשְׂרָאֵל לֵיכָה is altogether like our "one told Jacob." In Esth. ix. 30, the subject is probably Mordecai, mentioned v. 29.

relation to God, these names are singularly, the one of a parricide son of Sennacherib<sup>1</sup>, and of one, chief among the King of Babylon's princes<sup>2</sup>; the other probably a secular name, "the king's friend"<sup>3</sup>.

"4 I do not see why under the name of Bethel, the city so called is not understood. For since Jerusalem was not yet fortified, the Jews chose them sites in various places, where they should be less harassed. All hatred was concentrated on that city, which the neighbours wished not to be restored to its former greatness. Other cities they did not so molest. Bethel then, i. e. the assembly of the city, sent messengers to Jerusalem to offer sacrifices to God and consult the wise there."

2. To entreat the face of the Lord. They wished, it seems, (so to speak) to ingratiate themselves with God with an account of their past self-humiliation, on the day when the house of God was burned by Nebuchadnezzar. In regard to God, the word is always used of entreating Him by earnest prayer<sup>4</sup>.

3. Should I weep in the fifth month, separating myself? In the fifth month, from the seventh to the tenth day, Jerusalem was in flames, fired by Nebuchadnezzar. <sup>6</sup> He burnt the house of the Lord, and the king's house, and all the houses of Jerusalem and every great man's house he burnt with fire.

"7 Now since it is said that the temple is builded and we see that no cause of sorrow remaineth, answer, we pray, are we to do this or to change our sorrow into joy?"

Separating myself. This seems to be added, to intensify the fast which they had kept. The Nazarite was bound to <sup>8</sup> separate himself from wine and strong drink, and so, they severed themselves to the Lord, and consecrated themselves to Him<sup>9</sup>. These had severed themselves from food, from things pleasant, from pleasure, from sin, it may be, for the day, but not abidingly: they had not given themselves to God.

As I have done these so many years, lit. how many<sup>10</sup>. As if, although they knew that they were seventy years, they could not count them.

5. Speak unto all the people of the land. They of Bethel had spoken as one man, as Edom said to Israel,<sup>11</sup> Thou shalt

<sup>5</sup> The explanation of the idiom, stroked the face of, in regard to which critics have so descanted about anthropomorphism, is altogether imaginary. The phrase occurs, in all, 13 times in regard to God; three of these are in Zechariah, here, and vii. 21, 22; and besides Ex. xxxii. 11, 1 Sam. xiii. 12, 1 Kgs xiii. 6, (bis) 2 Kgs xiii. 4, Jer. xxvi. 19, Dan. ix. 13, Ps. cxix. 58, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 12, Mal. i. 9, and all the simplest prose. Of man it occurs only 3 times Ps. xlv. 18, Pr. xix. 6, Job xi. 19. In no dialect is there any trace of the meaning levis or palpo. The Arab كحل is, any how, used of hard friction, as to bruising collyrium, rubbing off hair from skin [tanning], striking with sword, &c. كحل (ult. ح) is "sweet;" كحل is "adorned with jewels."

5 Speak unto all the people of the land, and to the priests, saying, When ye <sup>a</sup> fasted and mourned in the fifth <sup>d</sup> and seventh <sup>e</sup> month even those seventy years, did ye at all fast <sup>f</sup> unto me, even to me?

6 And when ye did eat, and when ye did drink, || did not ye eat for yourselves, and || drink for yourselves?

not pass by me; and <sup>12</sup> the men of Israel said to the Hivite; Perhaps thou dwellest in the midst of me, and how shall I make a league with thee? God gives the answer not to them only, but to all like-minded with them, all the people of the land, the whole population (in our language); as Jeremiah says, <sup>13</sup> ye and your fathers, your kings and your princes and all the people of the land, and, <sup>14</sup> the scribe who mustered the people of the land.

When ye fasted and that, mourning. It was no mere abstinence from food (severe as the Jewish fasts were, one unbroken abstinence from evening to evening) but with real mourning, the word being used only of mourning for the dead<sup>15</sup>, or, in a few instances<sup>16</sup>, for a very great public calamity; probably with beating on the breast.

In the seventh month. The murder of Gedaliah, whom the king of Babylon made governor of the land, completed the calamities of Jerusalem, in the voluntary, but prohibited exile to Egypt, for fear lest the murder should be avenged on them<sup>17</sup>.

Did ye at all fast unto Me, Me<sup>18</sup>? God emphatically rejects such fasting as their's had been, as something, unutterably alien from Him, to Me, Me<sup>19</sup>! Yet the fasting and mourning had been real, but irreligious, like remorse for ill-deeds, which has self only for its ground. He prepares the way for His answer by correcting the error of the question. "4 Ye fasted to yourselves, not to Me. For ye mourned your sorrows, not your misdeeds; and your public fast was undertaken, not for My glory, but out of feeling for your own grief. But nothing can be pleasing to God, which is not referred to His glory. But those things alone can be referred to His glory, which are done with righteousness and devotion."

6. And when ye eat and when ye drink, is it not ye who eat and ye who drink? Conversely now that, after your return, ye feast for joy, this is no religious act; ye have all the good of it, there is no thanksgiving to God. Contrary to the Apostle's saying, <sup>20</sup> Whether ye eat or drink, or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God. "21 He eateth and drinketh to himself, who receiveth the nourishments of the body, which are the common gifts of the Creator, without

The noun ספד is in like way used of "mourning" for the dead, Gen. i. 10, Jer. vi. 26, Nu. v. 16, Zech. xii. 10, 11, 12; for the destruction of a people or place, Jer. xlviii. 38, Ez. xxvii. 34, Mi. i. 8, 11; for imminent destruction, Am. v. 17, Esth. iv. 3; or great public calamity, Jo. ii. 12, Is. xlvii. 12. In Ps. xxx. 12, it stands contrasted with a great outward expression of joy, dancing, כסל, [all].

7 || Should ye not hear the words which the LORD hath cried † by the former prophets, when Jerusalem was inhabited and in prosperity, and the cities thereof round about her, when men inhabited the south and the plain?

8 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah, saying,

9 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, <sup>h</sup> † Execute true judgment, and shew mercy and compassions every man to the needy. And any one fasts to himself, if he doth not give to the poor what for the time he withdraweth from himself, but keepeth it to be thereafter offered to his appetite. Hence it is said by Joel, sanctify a fast. For to 'sanctify a fast' is to shew an abstinence worthy of God through other good deeds. Let anger cease, quarrels be hushed. For in vain is the flesh worn, if the mind is not refrained from evil pleasures, since the Lord says by the Prophet, <sup>1</sup> Behold, in the day of your fast ye find pleasure. Behold, ye fast for strife and debate &c.<sup>2</sup>

7. Should ye not hear the words, or, Know ye not the words? The verb is presupposed in the emphatic question, as in, <sup>2</sup> Shall I, the blood of these men? David omits the word "drink" for abhorrence.

By the former prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah<sup>3</sup>, when Jerusalem was dwelling abidingly<sup>4</sup>, at ease, as the whole world then was, except herself, and the south and the low-country, both belonging to Judah, were inhabited. The restoration then was still very incomplete, since he contrasts their then condition with the present, as inhabited or no. The mountain, the south, and the low country, known still by its name of Sephēla to Greeks<sup>5</sup>, made up the territory of Judah<sup>6</sup>.

8. Instead of quoting the former prophets, Zechariah gives the substance of their exhortations, as renewed to himself.

9. Thus spake the Lord, i. e. through the former prophets, for he goes on to speak of their rejection in the past. Execute true judgement. He retains the words of Ezekiel<sup>7</sup>. The injunction itself runs throughout the prophets<sup>8</sup>. Shew mercy, i. e. tender love, to all; compassion, to the unhappy. Omit no act of love, God so loves the loving. <sup>9</sup> Like S. Paul to the Romans<sup>10</sup>, he names only the duties to the neighbour, but understands what relates to God. For the love of our neighbour presupposes the love of God, from which it springs. <sup>11</sup> After strictness of justice, let mercy to all follow, and specially to brethren, of the same blood and of one faith. Brother and neighbour we ought to account the whole human race, since we are all born of one parent, or those who are of the household of faith, according to the parable of the Gospel<sup>12</sup>, which willet us to understand by neighbour, not our kin, but all men."

10. And oppress not. He had commanded positive acts of love; he now forbids every sort of unlove. He that to his brother:

10 And 'oppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, the stranger, nor the poor; <sup>k</sup> and let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart.

11 But they refused to hearken, and <sup>l</sup> † pulled away the shoulder, and <sup>m</sup> † stopped their ears, that they should not hear.

12 Yea they made their <sup>n</sup> hearts as an adamant stone, <sup>o</sup> lest they should hear the law, and the words which the LORD of hosts

oppresseth the poor, Solomon had said<sup>13</sup>, reproacheth his Maker. The widow, the orphan, the stranger, the afflicted, are, throughout the law, the special objects of God's care. This was the condition which God made by Jeremiah<sup>14</sup>; If ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings, if ye thoroughly execute judgement between a man and his neighbour; if ye oppress not the stranger the fatherless and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, neither walk after other gods to your hurt, then will I cause you to dwell in this place. It was on the breach of the covenant to set their brethren free in the year of release, that God said; <sup>15</sup> I proclaim a liberty for you to the sword, to the pestilence and to the famine, and I will make you to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.

And let none of you imagine, i. e. devise<sup>16</sup>, as, by Micah, God retorted the evil upon them. They<sup>17</sup> devised evil on their beds; therefore, behold, against this family do I devise an evil, from which ye shall not remove your necks.

And made heavy their ears, fulfilling in themselves what God foretold to Isaiah would be the result of his preaching, make their ears heavy<sup>20</sup>. The heart, which will not hearken, becomes duller by the outward hearing, as S. Paul says, <sup>21</sup> The earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God; but that which beareth thorns and briars is rejected.

12. Harder than adamant. The stone, whatever it be, was hard enough to cut ineffaceable characters<sup>22</sup>: it was harder than flint<sup>23</sup>. It would cut rocks; it could not be graven itself, or receive the characters of God.

This is the last sin, obduracy, persevering impenitence, which<sup>24</sup> resisted the Holy Ghost, and <sup>25</sup> did despite to the Spirit of grace. Not through infirmity, but of set purpose, they hardened themselves, lest<sup>26</sup> they should convert and be healed. They feared to trust themselves to God's word, lest He should convert them by it.

Lest they should hear the law and the words which the Lord God sent by His Spirit by the hand of the former prophets.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The restoration of Jerusalem. 9 They are encouraged to the building by God's favour to them. 16 Good works are required of them. 18 Joy and enlargement are promised.

A GAIN the word of the LORD of hosts came to me, saying,

The Holy Ghost was the chief agent; by His Spirit; the inspired prophets were His instruments; by the hand of. Nehemiah confesses the same to God: Thou didst protest to them by Thy Spirit by the hand of Thy prophets. Moses was one of the greatest prophets. The law then may be included, either as delivered by Moses, or as being continually enforced by all the prophets. Observe the gradations. 1) The words of God are not heard. 2) The restive shoulder is shewn; men turn away, when God, by the inner motions of His Spirit or by lesser chastisements, would bring them to the yoke of obedience. "2 They would not bear the burden of the law, whereas they willingly bore that most heavy weight of their sins." 3) Obduracy. "2 Their adamant heart could be softened neither by promises nor threats." Therefore nothing remained but the great wrath, which they had treasured to themselves against the day of wrath. And so Zechariah returns to that, wherewith his message and visions of future mercy began, the great wrath which fell upon their fathers<sup>3</sup>.

"2 'I sought not,' He says, 'for your tears; I enjoined not bitterness of sorrow; but what, had they been done, the calamity, for which those tears were meet, had never befallen you. What was it which I admonished you formerly by the former prophets to recall you from sin? What I bid you by Zechariah now. This I preach, admonish, testify, inculcate upon you.'"

13. And it came to pass, i. e. this which God had said, As He cried and they heard not, so shall they cry and I will not hear, saith the Lord of hosts. God had often said this. "It shall be too late to cry for mercy, when it is the time of justice." So Wisdom had said by Solomon; 4 then, i. e. when distress and anguish cometh upon them, they shall call upon Me, but I will not answer; they shall seek Me early, and they shall not find Me. So by Isaiah, 5 When ye spread forth your hands, I will hide Mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear; your hands are full of bloods. So by Hosea<sup>6</sup>, by Micah<sup>7</sup>, by Jeremiah<sup>8</sup>. It was one message which was verified in every day of chastisement, "there will be a 'too late;'" not a final "too late," until the end of ends comes, but a "too late" for them, a "too late" to avert that particular judgement of God, whereby the sinner's earthly trial and future were changed permanently<sup>9</sup>.

14. But I scattered them, rather, And I will scatter them<sup>10</sup>. The saying continues what God had said that He had said, and which had come to pass. Among all nations whom they knew not. So God had repeatedly said by Jeremiah, 11 I will cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, ye nor your fathers; where I will not shew you favour. This was the aggravation of the original woe in the law: 12 The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand, a nation of fierce countenance. There was no mitigation of suffering, when the common bond between man and man, mutual speech, was wanting.

That no man passed through nor returned, lit. from passer through and from returner; as in the prophecy of Alexander's march and return, 13 because of him that passeth by and of him that returneth; and of Seir God saith, 14 I will cut off from him, passer-through and returner<sup>15</sup>. As we say, there shall be no traffic more through her.

And they made the pleasant land<sup>16</sup> desolate. They were the doers of what they by their sins caused, by bringing down the judgements of God. Heretofore the land which God had given them, had been in our language "the envy" of all who knew it; now they had made it into a desolation, one wide waste<sup>17</sup>.

"18 What is said in the beginning of the chapter against Jews who abstained indiscreetly, applies mystically to all, not inward, but rude Christians, who not being diligent enough but rather negligent about acts of piety and inward prayer and reformation of the powers of the soul, account highly of bodily exercises and outward observances, and use no slight scrupulosity as to things of less moment, and do not attend to the chief things, charity, humility, patience, meekness. On these it must be inculcated, that if they wish their fasts and other outward exercises to please God, they must judge true judgement, and be compassionate, kind, liberal to their neighbours, keep their mind ever steadfast in God, cast away wholly all hardness of heart, and be soft and open to receive within them the word of God. Otherwise their land will be desolate, i. e. deprived of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and they scattered amid various vices." "19 That which was formerly a pleasant land, and the hospice of the Trinity, is turned into a desert and dwelling-place of dragons."

VIII. "18 After the Lord had, in the preceding chapter, manifoldly rebuked the Jewish people, He now comforts it with renewed promises, as a good physician, who after a bitter draught employs sweet and soothing remedies; as the image of jealousy<sup>11</sup>, <sup>12</sup> went up from the Cherub, whereupon it was, to the threshold of the house; then <sup>13</sup> stood over the Cherubim; and then <sup>14</sup> went up from the midst of the city and stood upon the mountain, which is on the east side of the city, so removing from them. He had prophesied its return in the vision of the symbolic temple, how <sup>15</sup> the glory of the Lord came into the house by the way of the gate looking towards the East, and the Spirit took me up and brought me into the inner court, and behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house. This renewed dwelling in the midst of them, Zechariah too prophesies, in the same terms as in his third vision <sup>16</sup>, I will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem.

And Jerusalem shall be called the city of truth, being what she is called, since God would not call her untruthy; so Isaiah says, <sup>17</sup> afterwards thou shalt be called the city of righteousness, the faithful city, and <sup>18</sup> they shall call thee the city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel. So Zephaniah had prophesied, <sup>19</sup> The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies. Truth embraces everything opposite to untruth; faithfulness, as opposed to faithlessness; sincerity, as opposed to simulation; veracity, as opposed to falsehood; honesty, as opposed to untruth in act; truth of religion or faith, as opposed to untrue doctrine. <sup>20</sup> It shall be called the city of truth, i. e. of the True God or of truth of life, doctrine, and justice. It is chiefly verified by the Coming of Christ, Who often preached in Jerusalem, in Whom the city afterwards believed.

And the mountain of the Lord of hosts, Mount Zion, on which the temple shall be built, shall be called and be the mountain of holiness. This had been the favourite title of the Psalmists<sup>21</sup>, and Isaiah<sup>22</sup>; and Obadiah had foretold, <sup>23</sup> upon mount Zion there shall be holiness; and Jeremiah, <sup>24</sup> As yet they shall use this speech in the land of Judah and in the cities thereof, when I shall bring again their captivity; The Lord shall bless thee, O habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness. It should be called and be; it should fulfil the destination of its titles; as, in the Apostles' Creed we profess our belief of "the holy Catholic Church," and holiness is one of its characteristics.

4. There shall yet dwell old men and old women. <sup>25</sup> Men and women shall not be slain now, as before in the time of the Babylonish destruction, but shall fulfil their natural course. that most loving Samaritan poured in wine and oil." The chapter falls into two portions, each marked by the words, The Word of the Lord of hosts came<sup>1</sup>, or came unto me, the first<sup>2</sup> declaring the reversal of the former judgements, and the complete, though conditional, restoration of God's favour; the 2nd<sup>3</sup> containing the answer to the original question as to those fasts, in the declaration of the joy and the spread of the Gospel. The first portion has, again, a sevenfold, the second, a threefold subordinate division; marked by the beginning, Thus saith the Lord of hosts.

2. Thus saith the Lord of hosts. "4 At each word and sentence, in which good things, for their greatness, almost incredible are promised, the prophet premises, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, as if he would say, Think not that what I pledge you are my own, and refuse me not credence as man. What I unfold are the promises of God."

I was jealous, lit. I have been and am jealous for<sup>5</sup>. He repeats in words slightly varied, but in the same rhythm, the declaration of His tender love wherewith He opened the series of visions, thereby assuring beforehand that this was, like that, an answer of peace. The form of words shews, that this was a jealousy for, not with her; yet it was one and the same strong, yea infinite love, whereby God, as He says, <sup>6</sup> clave unto their fathers to love them and chose their seed after them out of all nations. His jealousy of their sins was part of that love, whereby, <sup>7</sup> without disturbance of passion or of tranquillity, He inflicted rigorous punishment, as a man fearfully reproofs a wife who sins. They are two different forms of love according to two needs. "8 The jealousy<sup>9</sup> of God is good, to love men and hate the sins of men. Contrariwise the jealousy of the devil is evil, to hate men and love the sins of men." "10 Since God's anger had its origin in the vehemence of His love (for this sort of jealousy arises from the greatness of love), there was hope that the anger might readily be appeased towards her."

3. I am returned. "7 Without change in Myself, I am turned to that people from the effect of justice to the sweetness of mercy, and I will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem, in the temple and the people, indwelling the hearts of the good by charity and grace. Christ also, Very God and Very Man, visibly conversed and was seen in Zion." "10 When He says, 'I am turned,' He shews that she was turned too. He had said, Turn unto Me and I will turn unto you; otherwise she would not have been received into favour by Him. As the fruit of this conversion, He promises her His presence, the ornaments of truth, the hope of security, and adorns her with glorious titles."

God had symbolised to Ezekiel the departure of His special presence, in that the glory of the God of Israel which was over the temple, at the very place where they placed merely that the temporal promises seemed "too good to be true" (in our words) "<sup>h</sup> in the eyes of the people who had come from the captivity, seeing that the city almost desolate, the ruins of the city-walls, the charred houses shewed the doings of the Babylonians." It is in the day of the fulfilment, not of the anticipation, that they would seem marvellous in their eyes, as the Psalmist says, <sup>9</sup> This is the Lord's doing: and it is marvellous in our eyes. The temporal blessings which God would give were not so incredible. They were but the ordinary gifts of His Providence: they involved no change in their outward relations. His people were still to remain under their Persian masters, until their time too should come. It was matter of gladness and of God's Providence, that the walls of Jerusalem should be rebuilt: but not so marvellous, when it came to pass. The mysteries of the Gospel are a marvel even to the blessed Angels. That fulfilment being yet future, so the people, in whose eyes that fulfilment should be marvellous, were future also. And this was to be a remnant still. It does not say, this people which is a remnant, nor this remnant of the people, i. e., those who remained over out of the people who went into captivity, or this remnant, but "the remnant of this people," i. e. those who should remain over of it, i. e., of the people who were returned. It is the remnant of the larger whole, this people<sup>10</sup>. It is still the remnant according to the election of grace; that election which obtained what all Israel sought, but, seeking wrongly, were blinded<sup>11</sup>.

Shall it be marvellous in Mine eyes also? It is an indirect question in the way of exclamation<sup>12</sup>. It be marvellous in Mine eyes also, rejecting the thought, as alien from the nature of God, to Whom <sup>13</sup> all things are possible, yea, what with men is impossible. As God says to Jeremiah, <sup>14</sup> Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh. Is there anything too hard for Me? <sup>15</sup> For with God nothing shall be impossible. <sup>16</sup> The things which are impossible with men are possible with God. <sup>17</sup> For with God all things are possible. <sup>18</sup> For He is the Lord of all powers, fulfilling by His will what exceedingly surpasseth nature, and effecting at once what seemeth Him good. The mystery of the Incarnation passeth all marvel and discourse, and no less the benefits redounding to us. For how is it not next to incredible, that the Word, Begotten of God, should be united with the flesh and be in the form of a servant, and endure the Cross and the insults and outrages of the Jews? Or how should one not admire above measure the issue of the dispensation, whereby sin was destroyed, death abolished, corruption expelled, and man, once a recreant slave, became resplendent with the grace of an adopted son?"

the West country, “<sup>1</sup>i.e. the whole world; for Israel had been scattered in every part of the world.” God had said to Israel, <sup>2</sup>I will bring thy seed from the east and gather thee from the west; I will say to the north, Give up, and to the south, Keep not back. The two tribes had been carried to Babylon and had been dispersed, or had been allowed to migrate to the various provinces of the Babylonian or Persian empire. But these were in the East, though commonly called the North, because they invaded Israel from the North. Those who had migrated to Egypt were in the South. As yet none were in the West. The dispersion, as well as the gathering, was still future. When our Lord came, they had migrated Westward. Greece, Italy, Asia minor, were full of them; and from all they were gathered. All S. Paul’s Epistles written to named Churches, were written to Churches formed from converts in the West. In all these countries God would gather His one people, His Church, not of <sup>3</sup>the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles, grafted into them, as our Lord said, <sup>4</sup>I say unto you, that many shall come from the East and from the West, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven; but the children of the kingdom (the unbelieving Jews, who were not the remnant) shall be cast out into outer darkness.

8. They shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem, not the literal Jerusalem; for this would not contain the Jews from all quarters of the world, whom, as they multiplied, the whole land could not contain; but the promised Jerusalem, the Jerusalem, which should be inhabited as towns without walls, to which the Lord should be a wall of fire round about.

And they shall be My people. He promises this as to those who were already His people: I will save My people—and will bring them, and they shall dwell—and they shall be My people. And this they were to be in a new way, by conversion of heart, as Jeremiah says, <sup>5</sup>I will give them an heart to know Me, that I am the Lord, and they shall be My people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto Me with their whole heart, and, <sup>6</sup>This shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put My law in their inward parts, and will write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be My people.

<sup>7</sup>The circuit of one city will not contain so great a multitude. But one confession of faith, one conspiracy of sanctity, one communion of religion and righteousness, can easily enfold all born of the holy fathers, united to them in faith and piety. And God is specially called the God of all these. For He specially consults for these, loads them with benefits, fences them in with most strong protection, illumines

In truth and in righteousness. This too is on account of their former relation to God. Isaiah had upbraided them for a worship of God, <sup>8</sup>not in truth and righteousness. Jeremiah had said, <sup>9</sup>Thou shalt swear, the Lord liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness. God should be their God in truth and righteousness; <sup>10</sup>truth in fulfilling His promises; righteousness in rewarding every man according to his works.”

9. Let your hands be strong. The fulfilment of God’s former promises are the earnest of the future; His former providences, of those to come. Having then those great promises for the time to come, they were to be earnest in whatever meantime God gave them to do. He speaks to them, as hearing in these days, i.e. that fourth year of Darius in which they apparently were, these words from the mouth of the prophets, which were in the day when the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid, the temple, that it might be built. Haggai was now gone to his rest. His voice had been silent for two years. But his words lived on. The fulfilment of what the prophets had then spoken in God’s Name, was a ground, why their hands should be strong, now and thereafter, for every work which God gave or should give them to do. <sup>10</sup>Some things are said to Jerusalem, i.e. to the Jews, which belong to them only; some relate to what is common to them and the other members of the Church, i.e. those who are called from the Gentiles. Now he speaks to the Jews, but not so as to seem to forget what he had said before. He would say, Ye who hear the words, which in those days when the temple was founded, Haggai and Zechariah spake, be strong and proceed to the work which ye began of fulfilling the will of the Lord in the building of the temple, and in keeping from the sins, in which ye were before entangled. For as, before ye began to build the temple, ye were afflicted with many calamities, but after ye had begun, all things went well with you, as Haggai said <sup>11</sup>, so, if you cultivate piety and do not depart from God, ye shall enjoy great abundance of spiritual good.” <sup>12</sup>The memory of past calamity made the then tranquillity much sweeter, and stirred the mind to greater thanksgiving. He set forth then the grief of those times when he says;

10. There was no hire for man, lit. hire for man came not to pass <sup>13</sup>. It was longed for, waited for, and came not. So little was the produce, that neither labourer nor beast of burden were employed to gather it in.

Neither was there peace to him who went out or came in because of the affliction, better, of the adversary. In such an empire as the Persian, there was large scope for actual

13. As ye were a curse among the nations, O house of Judah and house of Israel; so I will save you. The ten tribes bore the name of Israel, in contrast with the two tribes with the name of Judah, not only in the history but in the prophets; as Hosea says <sup>14</sup>, I will no more have mercy upon the house of Israel, and on the house of Judah I will have mercy. Here he unites both; both, in the time of their captivity, were a curse, were held to be a thing accursed, as it is said, <sup>15</sup> He that is hanged is the curse of God, i.e. a thing accursed by Him; and God foretold of Judah, that they should be <sup>16</sup> a desolation and a curse, and by Jeremiah, <sup>17</sup> I will deliver them to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for hurt, a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse in all places whither I shall drive them; and in deed, when it was so, <sup>18</sup> therefore is your land a desolation and an astonishment and a curse without an inhabitant, as at this day. Now the sentence was to be reversed as to both. As ye were a curse, among the nations, naming each, so I will save you. There would have been no proportion between the curse and the blessing, unless both had been included under the blessing, as they were under the curse. But Israel had no share in the temporal blessing, not returning from captivity, as Zechariah knew they were not returned hitherto. Therefore the blessings promised must be spiritual. Even a Jewish commentator saw this. <sup>19</sup> It is possible, that this may have been spoken of the second temple, on condition that they should keep the commandments of the Lord; or, it is still future, referring to the days of the Messiah: and this is proved by the following verse which says, O house of Judah and house of Israel. During the second temple the house of Israel did not return.

And ye shall be a blessing. This is a revival and an application of the original promise to Abraham, <sup>20</sup> thou shalt be a blessing; which was continued to Jacob, <sup>21</sup> God give thee the blessing of Abraham, to thee and to thy seed with thee. And of the future king, of whom it is said, <sup>22</sup> Thou gavest him length of days for ever and ever, David says, Thou hast made him blessings for ever, and again, <sup>23</sup> They shall be blessed in Him. So Isaiah had said of the days of Christ, <sup>24</sup> In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the land; and symbolically of the cluster of grapes, <sup>25</sup> Destroy it not: for a blessing is in it; and Ezekiel, <sup>26</sup> I will make them and the places round about My hill a blessing. They were this; for of them, <sup>27</sup> according to the flesh, Christ came, Who is over all, God blessed for ever; hostility among the petty nations subject to it, so that they did not threaten revolt against itself, or interfere with the payment of tribute, as in the Turkish Empire now, or in the weak government of Greece. At the rebuilding of the walls, after this time, the Samaritans, Arabians, Ammonites, Ashdodites conspired to fight against Jerusalem, and to slay them<sup>1</sup>. They are summed up here in the general title used here, our adversaries<sup>2</sup>.

For I set; lit. and I set. Domestic confusions and strife were added to hostility from without. Nehemiah's reformation was, in part, to stop the grinding usury in time of dearth or to pay the king's taxes, through which men sold lands, vineyards, even their children<sup>3</sup>.

God (lit.) let them loose, each against his neighbour, in that He left them to their own ways and withheld them not.

11. And now. The words imply a contrast of God's dealings, rather than a contrast of time. I am not to the remnant of this people. He had said, I will be to them God; so now He does not say that He will not do to them, as in former days, but I am not to the remnant of this people as heretofore. He would be, as He was in Jesus, in a new relation to them.

12. For the seed shall be peace<sup>4</sup>. "Your seed shall be peace and a blessing, so that they will call it 'a seed of peace.'" The unusual construction is perhaps adopted, in order to suggest a further meaning. It is a reversal of the condition, just spoken of, when there was no peace to him that went, or to him that returned.

The vine shall give her fruit and the ground shall give her increase. The old promise in the law on obedience<sup>5</sup>, as the exact contrary was threatened on disobedience<sup>6</sup>. It had been revived in the midst of promise of spiritual blessing and of the coming of Christ, in Ezekiel<sup>7</sup>. "By the metaphor of sensible things he explains (as the prophets often do) the abundance of spiritual good in the time of the new law, as did Hosea<sup>8</sup>, Joel<sup>9</sup>, Amos<sup>10</sup>, and many others." And I will cause the remnant of the people to inherit. "As if he said, I promised these things not to you who live now, but to the future remnant of your people, i.e. those who shall believe in Christ and shall be saved, while the rest perish. These shall possess these spiritual goods, which I promise now, under the image of temporal." As our Lord said<sup>11</sup>, He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be My son.

<sup>4</sup> It cannot be, the seed shall be safe, (Jon.), for השלום is never used except of peace; nor is even שלום used as a predicate, except of human beings, either directly or as implied, as in Job v. 21, thy tent, שלום אהלך; Job xxi. 9, their houses are peace from fear, בתיהם שלום פחד. The sense incolumitas, integritas, is wrongly assumed in Rod. Ges. Thea. Deut. xxix. 18, 1 Kgs ii. 33, Ps. xxxvii. 11, 37, lxxii. 3, 7, Is. lii. 7, lvii. 19, 21, Jer. iv. 10, vi. 14, except as far as this may be involved in "peace." Nor can שלום be a noun, abs. before נא, of them were the Apostles and Evangelists, of them every writer of God's word, of them those who carried the Gospel throughout the world. "Was this fulfilled, when the Jews were under the Persians? or when they paid tribute to the Greeks? or when they trembled, hour by hour, at the mention of the Roman name? Do not all count those who rule much happier than those oppressed by the rule of others? The prediction then was fulfilled, not then, but when Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, shone on the earth, and He chose from the Hebrews lights, through whom to dissipate darkness and illumine the minds of men who were in that darkness. The Jews, when restored from the captivity, seemed born to slavery." They were reputed to be of slaves the most despised. "But when they had through Christ been put in possession of that most sure liberty, they overthrew, through their empire, the power and tyranny of the evil spirits."

14. As I thought to punish you (lit. to do evil to you) and repented not. In like way God says in Jeremiah<sup>2</sup>, I have purposed and will not repent.

15. So have I turned and purposed<sup>3</sup> in these days to do well unto Jerusalem. "God, to be better understood, speaketh with the feelings and after the manner of men, although, in the passionless and unchangeable God, there is no provocation to anger, nor turning, implying change in Himself." So He says by Jeremiah<sup>4</sup>, I know the thoughts that I think towards you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace and not of evil. And, with the same contrast as here,<sup>5</sup> As I have watched over them to pluck up and to break down and to throw down, and to destroy and to afflict, so will I watch over them, to build and to plant, saith the Lord. His having done what He purposed before was an earnest the more, that He would do what He purposed now. His chastisements were the earnest of His mercies; for they too were an austere form of His love. "When the Lord stretches out His hand to strike those who are contumacious in guilt, none can hold His hand that He exact not the due punishment. Therefore He says, that He repented not; so, when He receives to grace those who repent of their sins, no one can any way delay the course of His benevolence. <sup>7</sup>For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance."

And to the house of Judah. <sup>8</sup>He speaks to the two tribes, not to, or of, the ten, because Christ was to come to the two tribes, and Zechariah was prophesying to them, and they were to be admonished to prepare themselves in good works, lest the coming of Christ should not profit them, on account of their depraved ways. But the ten tribes were far off in the cities of the Medes, nor was Christ to come to them; but they were to hear the Gospel through the Apostles, and so he prophesies of the conversion of all to the glory of Christ, yet he could not admonish all, but those only to whom he was sent.

16. These are the things that ye shall do. He exhorts them to the same duties, to which the former prophets had exhorted their fathers<sup>9</sup>, and, as before, first positively to truth and peace; then to avoid everything contrary to it.
Judgement of peace must be judgement which issues in peace, as all righteous judgement righteously received, in which case each party acquiesces, must. "If ye judge righteousness, there will be peace between the litigants, according to that proverb, <sup>11</sup>He that hath his coat taken from him by the tribunal, let him sing and go his way" ["because," says a gloss<sup>12</sup>, "they have judged the judgement of truth, and have taken away that which would have been stolen property, if he retained it," being in fact not his]. And they have quoted that, <sup>13</sup>And all this people shall go to their place in peace."
<sup>14</sup>All this people, even he that is condemned in judgement.
It is also interpreted of arbitration. What sort of judgement is that, in which there is peace? It is that of arbitration."

17. For all these things do I hate. lit. emphatic, <sup>15</sup>For they are all these things which I hate. This is the sum of what I hate; for they comprise in brief the breaches of the two tables, the love of God and of man.

19. The fast of the fourth month. On the ninth day of the fourth month<sup>16</sup> of Zedekiah's eleventh year, Jerusalem, in the extremity of famine, opened to Nebuchadnezzar, and his princes sat in her gate; in the tenth month<sup>17</sup> of his ninth year Nebuchadnezzar began the siege. Ezekiel was bidden <sup>18</sup>on its tenth day; write thee the name of the day, of this same day, as the beginning of God's uttermost judgements against the bloody city<sup>19</sup>. The days of national sorrow were to be

<sup>19</sup> Ib. 6—14. The Jews in S. Jerome's time added, that in the fourth month Moses brake the tables of the law; in the fifth month was the rebellion on the return of the spies, and the sentence of the forty years' wandering. This is true. For since Moses went up into the mount in the third month (Ex. xix. 1, 16, xxiv. 12, 16.), the end of the forty days (Ib. 18), after which he came down and brake the tables (Ex. xxxii. 15, 19) would fall in the fourth month. Ribera calculates the fourth month thus: setting off from Sinai, 90th day of 2nd month. Nu. x. 11; 8 days' journey, Ib. 33; halt of one month, Ib. xi. 20, 21; of 7 days, Ib. xii. 15; 40 days' search of spies, Ib. xiii. 25.

turned into exuberant joy, joy and gladness and cheerful feasts<sup>1</sup>, for the sorrows, which they commemorated, were but the harbingers of joy, when the chastisements were ended; only He adds, love the truth and peace; for such love whereby they would be Israelites indeed, in whose spirits is no guile, were the conditions of their participating the blessings of the Gospel, of which he goes on to speak;

20. It shall yet be that. The promises are those which God had already made by Isaiah<sup>2</sup> and Micah<sup>3</sup>. Yet where was the shew of their fulfilment? The Jews themselves, a handful: the temple unfinished; its completion depending, in human sight, upon the will of their heathen masters, the rival worship at Samaria standing and inviting to coalition. Appearances and experience were against it. God says virtually, that it was, in human sight, contrary to all expectations. But "weakness is aye Heaven's might." Despite of all, of the fewness of those who were returned, their down-heartedness, broken condition, hopelessness, though all had hitherto failed, though, or rather because, all human energy and strength were gone, as God had said before, The Lord shall yet choose Jerusalem, so now, It shall yet be that.

Nations and many cities shall come. He describes vividly the eagerness and mutual impulse, with which not only many but mighty nations should throng to the Gospel, and every fresh conversion should win others also, till the great tide should sweep through the world.

21. The inhabitants of one city shall go to another. It is one unresting extension of the faith, the restlessness of faith and love. "They shall not be satisfied with their own salvation, careless about the salvation of others; they shall employ all labour and industry, with wondrous love, to provide for the salvation of others as if it were their own." It is a marvellous stirring of minds. Missionary efforts, so familiar with us as to be a household word, were unknown then. The time was not yet come. Before the faith in Christ came, the Jewish people were not to be the converters of mankind. They were to await for Him, the Redeemer of the world, through Whom and to Whom they were to be first converted, and then the world through those who were of them. This mutual conversion was absolutely unknown. The prophet<sup>7</sup> predicts certainly that it would be, and in God's time it was. From you, S. Paul writes to a small colony in Greece<sup>8</sup>, sounded out the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad.<sup>9</sup> Your faith, he writes to the heathen capital of the world, is spoken of throughout the whole world. Within eighty years after our Lord's Ascension, the Roman governor of Bithynia reported, on occasion of the then persecution, that it spread as a contagion. "The contagion of that superstition traversed not cities only but villages and scattered houses too." Before the persecution, the temples had been desolated, the solemn rites long intermitted, the sacrificed animals had very rarely found a purchaser. An impostor of the same date says, "Pontus is full of atheists and Christians."<sup>10</sup> "There is no one race of men," it was said before the middle of the second century<sup>11</sup>, "whether Barbarians or Greeks or by whatsoever name called, whether of those wandering houseless tribes who live in waggons or those pastoral people who dwell in tents, in which there are not prayers and Eucharists to the Father and Creator of all things, through the name of the crucified Jesus." "The word of our teacher," said another<sup>12</sup>, "abode not in Judæa alone, as philosophy in Greece; but was poured out throughout the whole world, persuading Greeks and barbarians in their several nations and villages and every city, whole houses and each hearer individually, and having brought over to the truth no few even of the very philosophers. And if any ordinary magistrate forbid the Greek philosophy, forthwith it vanishes; but our teaching, forthwith at its first announcement, kings and emperors and subordinate rulers and governors with all their mercenaries and countless multitudes forbid, and war against us and try to extirpate; but it the rather flourishes." The second century had not closed, before another said, "We are a people of yesterday, and yet we have filled every place belonging to you, cities, islands, castles, towns, assemblies, your very camp, your tribes, companies, palace, senate, forum! We leave you your temples only. We can count your armies; our numbers in a single province will be greater." "Men cry out that the state is beset; that the Christians are in their fields, in their forts, in their islands. They mourn, as for a loss, that every sex, age, condition, and now even rank is going over to this sect." "On whom besides have all nations believed, except on Christ Who hath already come?" Then having enumerated the nations mentioned in the Acts<sup>13</sup>, he adds, "And now the varieties of the Getulians, and the many tracts of the Moors, all the bounds of the Spains, and the divers nations of the Gauls, and places of the Britons, unreached by the Romans but subdued to Christ; of Sarmatians, Dacians, Germans, and Scythians, and of many remote nations, and many provinces and islands, unknown to us, and which we can scarce enumerate. In all which places the name of Christ, Who hath already come, reigneth, seeing that before Him the gates of all cities are opened and none are shut against Him, before Whom the bars of iron are broken in pieces and the gates of brass are opened. In all these places dwelleth a people called by the name of Christ. For who could reign over all, save Christ the Son of God, Who was foretold as about to reign over all nations for ever?" Then having contrasted the limited rule of Solomon, Darius, the Pharaohs, Nebuchadnezzar, Alexander, "the Romans who protect their own empire by the strength of their legions and are unable to extend the might of their kingdom beyond these nations [Germans, Britons, Moors, Getulians], he sums up, "but the kingdom and the Name of Christ is extended every where, is believed in every where, is worshipped by all the nations above enumerated. Every where He reigns, every where is adored, is given every where equally to all. With Him no king hath greater favour; no Barbarian inferior joy; no dignities or birth enhance the merit of any; to all He is equal; to all, King; to all Judge; to all, God and Lord." A little later, a heathen owns, while calumniating, "Those most foul rites of that impious coali-

theism, but the God, Who had revealed Himself to Israel, Who, when our Lord came, was worshipped in Jerusalem,

CHAPTER IX.

1 God defendeth his church. 9 Zion is exhorted to rejoice for the coming of Christ, and his peaceable

Nature it is not only the simple truth, but essential to the truth. Pilate said to Him in scorn, Am I a Jew?<sup>1</sup> Thine own nation and the Chief Priests have delivered Thee unto me. But it was essential to the fulfilment of God's promises. The Christ was to be <sup>2</sup>the Son of David. <sup>3</sup>Hath not the Scripture said, That Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, where David was? David, <sup>4</sup>being a prophet and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins according to the flesh, He would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; <sup>5</sup>Of this man's seed hath God, according to promise, raised unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus. Whence S. Paul begins his great doctrinal Epistle with this contrast, <sup>6</sup>the Gospel of God concerning His Son Jesus Christ, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power. He was that <sup>7</sup>one Man among a thousand, whom Solomon says, I found; but a woman among all those have I not found; the one in the whole human race. It was fulfilled in the very letter when <sup>8</sup>they brought to Him all that were diseased, and besought Him that they might only touch the hem of His garment: and as many as touched were made perfectly whole. <sup>9</sup>The whole multitude sought to touch Him, for there went virtue out of Him and healed all.

Even the Jews saw the reference to the Messiah. <sup>10</sup>All nations shall come, falling on their faces before the Messiah and the Israelites, saying, Grant, that we may be Thy servants and of Israel. For as relates to the doctrine and the knowledge of the law, the Gentiles shall be their servants, according to that, In those days ten men &c."

IX. 1. The burden<sup>11</sup>of the word of the Lord in [or upon]<sup>12</sup>the land of Hadrach. The foreground of this prophecy is the course of the victories of Alexander, which circled round the holy land without hurting it, and ended in the overthrow of the Persian empire. The surrender of Damascus followed first, immediately on his great victory at the Issus; then Sidon yielded itself and received its ruler from the conqueror. Tyre he utterly destroyed; Gaza, we know, perished; he passed harmless by Jerusalem. Samaria, on his return from Egypt, he chastised.

It is now certain that there was a city called Hadrach in the neighbourhood of Damascus and Hamath, although its exact site is not known. "It was first found upon the geo-kingdom. 12 God's promises of victory and defence. Before CHRIST cir. 487.

graphical tablets<sup>13</sup> among the Assyrian inscriptions." <sup>14</sup>*In the catalogue of Syrian cities, tributary to Nineveh, (of which we have several copies in a more or less perfect state, and varying from each other, both in arrangement and extent) there are three names, which are uniformly grouped together and which we read Manatsuah, Magida [Megiddo] and Du'ar [Dor]. As these names are associated with those of Samaria, Damascus, Arpad, Hamath, Carchemish, Hadrach, Zobah, there can be no doubt of the position of the cities<sup>15</sup>." In the Assyrian Canon, Hadrach is the object of three Assyrian expeditions, <sup>16</sup>9183 (B. C. 818), 9190 (811) and 9200 (801). The first of these follows upon one against Damascus, 9182 (817). In the wars of Tiglath-pileser ii. (the Tiglath-pileser of Holy Scripture,) it has been twice decyphered; 1) in the war B.C. 738, 737, after the mention of "the cities to Saua the mountain which is in Lebanon were divided, the land of Bahalzephon to Ammana" (Ammon), there follows Hadrach<sup>17</sup>; and subsequently there are mentioned as joined to the league, "19 districts of Hamath, and the cities which were round them, which are beside the sea of the setting sun." 2) In his "war in Palestine and Arabia," <sup>18</sup>the city of Hadrach to the land of Saua," and six other cities are enumerated, as "the cities beside the upper sea," which, he says, "I possessed, and six of my generals as governors over them I appointed." No other authority nearly approaches these times. The nearest authority is of the second century after our Lord, A.D. 116. <sup>19</sup>R. Josè, born of a Damascene mother, said, answering R. Yehudah ben Elai<sup>20</sup>, "I call heaven and earth to witness upon me, that I am of Damascus, and that there is a place called Hadrach." S. Cyril of Alexandria says<sup>21</sup>, that "the land of Hadrach must be somewhere in the Eastern parts, and near to Emath (now Epiphania of Antioch) a little further than Damascus, the metropolis of the Phœnicians and Palestine." A writer of the 10th century<sup>22</sup> says that there was "a very beautiful mosque there, called the Mesjed-el-Khadra, and that the town was named from it." The conjecture that Hadrach might be the name of a king<sup>23</sup>, or an idol<sup>24</sup>, will now probably be abandoned, nor can the idea, (which before seemed the most probable and which was very old), that it was a symbolic name, hold any longer. For the Prophets do use symbolic names<sup>25</sup>; but then they are names which they themselves frame. Micah again selects several names of towns, now* almost unknown and probably unimportant, in order to impress upon his people some meaning connected with them<sup>1</sup>, but then he does himself so connect it. He does not name it (so to say), leaving it to explain itself. The name Hadrach<sup>2</sup> would be a real name, used symbolically, without anything in the context to shew that it is a symbol.

<sup>23</sup> The idiom, the land of, is used of a people, Canaan, Benjamin, Israel, Judah, Zebulun, Naphtali, Simin, Chittim, Egypt, Assyria, the Philistines; or of the actual king, speaking of his territory, (as Neh. ix. 22, they possessed the land of Sihon, and the land of the king of Heshbon and the land of Og, king of Bashan. (Sihon and Og the king of Heshbon being, at the time spoken of, in actual possession of that land); but it is no where used of any past king or of an idol; much less would it be used in reference to an unknown king or idol. Scotland might, in oratory, be called "land of the Bruce," or England perhaps, "thou land of Mammon." But it would not be called, without emphasis, "land of Stephen" or "Edgar" or any obscure Saxon king.

<sup>24</sup> The people, not the land, is called "the people of Chemoah" (i. e. the people who worshipped it) Nu. xxi. 29. Jer. xlviii. 46. Nor is there any like name of an idol. "Derketo" (v. Alphen) would be דַּרְכֵּתָא. Hitzig gave up the combination, by which he made the name of an idol. (Kl. Proph. Ed. 3.)

The cities, upon which the burden or heavy prophecy fell, possessed no interest for Israel. Damascus was no longer a hostile power; Hamath had ever been peaceable, and was far away; Tyre and Sidon did not now carry on a trade in Jewish captives. But the Jews knew from Daniel, that the empire, to which they were in subjection, would be overthrown by Greece<sup>3</sup>. When that rapid attack should come, it would be a great consolation to them to know, how they themselves would fare. It was a turning point in their history and the history of the then known world. The prophet describes<sup>4</sup> the circuit, which the conqueror would take around the land which God defended; how the thunder-cloud circled round Judæa, broke irresistibly upon cities more powerful than Jerusalem, but was turned aside from the holy city in going and returning, because God encamped around it.

"<sup>5</sup> The selection of the places and of the whole line of country corresponds very exactly to the march of Alexander after the battle of Issus, when Damascus, which Darius had chosen as the strong depository of his wealth, of Persian women of rank, confidential officers and envoys<sup>6</sup>" was betrayed, but so opened its gates to his general, Parmenio. Zidon, a city renowned for its antiquity and its founders, surrendered freely; Tyre, here specially marked out, was taken after a 7 months' siege; Gaza too resisted for 5 months, was taken, and, as it was said, "plucked up<sup>7</sup>."

And Damascus shall be the rest thereof. God's judgement fell first upon Damascus. But the word "resting-place" is commonly used of quiet peaceful resting, especially as given by God to Israel; of the ark, the token of the Presence of God, after its manifold removals, and of the glorious dwelling-place of the Christ among men<sup>8</sup>. The prophet seems then purposely to have chosen a word of large meaning, which should at once express (as he had before<sup>9</sup>), that the word of God should fall heavily on Damascus and yet be its resting-place. Hence, about the time of our Lord, the Jews interpreted this of the coming of the Messiah, that "<sup>10</sup> Jerusalem should reach to the gates of Damascus. Since Damascus shall be the place of His rest, but the place of His rest is only the house of the sanctuary, as it is said, This is My rest for ever; here will I dwell." Another added<sup>11</sup>, "All the prophets and all prophesied but of the years of redemption and the days of the Messiah." Damascus, on the conversion of S. Paul, became the first resting-place of the word of God, the first-fruits of the Gentiles whom the Apostle of the Gentiles gathered from East to West throughout the world.

When [or For] the eyes of man, as [lit. and i. e. especially beyond others] of all the tribes of Israel, shall be toward the Lord. This also implies a conversion of Gentiles, as well as Jews. For man, as contrasted with Israel, must be the heathen world, mankind<sup>12</sup>. "<sup>13</sup> The eyes of all must needs look in adoration to God, expecting all good from Him, because the Creator of all provided for the well-being of all, as the Apostle says, Is He the God of the Jews only? Is He not also of the Gentiles? Yea, of the Gentiles also. God's time of delivering His people is, when they pray to Him. So Jehoshaphat prayed, O our God, wilt Thou not judge them? For we have no strength against this great company, which is come against us, and we know not what we shall do; but our eyes are on Thee<sup>14</sup>; and the Psalmist says, The eyes of all wait towards Thee; and, as the eyes of servants are unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden are unto the hand of her mistress, so our eyes are unto the Lord our God, until He have mercy upon us. "For in those days," says a Jew, who represents the traditional interpretation<sup>15</sup>, "man shall look to his Creator, and his eyes shall look to the Blessed One, as it was said above, we will go with you, and they shall join themselves, they and their cities, to the cities of Israel." And another<sup>16</sup>; "In those days the eyes of all mankind shall be to the Lord, not to idols or images; therefore the land of Hadrach and Damascus, and the other places near the land of Israel—shall be included among the cities of Judah, and shall be in the faith of Israel."

2. And Hamath also shall border thereby<sup>21</sup>. Near to it in place and character, it shall share its subdual. After the betrayal of Damascus, Parmenio was set over all Syria. "<sup>22</sup> The Syrians, not as yet tamed by the losses of war, despised for כְּשִׁים; for כְּשִׁים could not be mentally substituted for it, since כְּשִׁים would be an impossible combination. For inhabitants are of a land, city &c.; but כְּשִׁים are the people themselves.

<sup>2</sup> The word, divided into two halves, would signify, "sharp-soft." חֲדָר is used of sharpness (see on Hab. i. 8, comp. Ps. lvii. 5, Is. xlix. 2.); חֲדָר of delicacy, Deut. xxxiii. 54-56; of weakness, Ib. xx. 8, 2 Chr. xiii. 7. And so it would signify, what was in one respect or at one time "sharp," and in or at another, "soft." A Jewish tradition, extant in times soon after our Lord, so explained it: "Severe to the Gentiles, and tender to Israel." (R. Judah ben Elai, a disciple of R. Akibah. Wolf. Bibl. Hebr. ii. 690) S. Jerome has the same from his Jewish teacher, "The burden of the word of the Lord is on the land of Hadrach; on which the Lord exercised both His austerity and clemency; austerity on those who would not believe, clemency on those who, with the Apostles, returned to Him." The name would have singularly suited Persia, whose empire Alexander was engaged in destroying, when this prophecy was fulfilled, and which was aimed at in them. It would describe them as they were, fierce and cruel, as conquerors, but infamous, even among the Heathen, for their inconstancy. Sins of the flesh, destroying pure love, brutalising the soul, disorganising the frame, are parents of ferocity, from which voluptuousness seems at first sight most alien.

It is probably a proper name, Jud. xx. 43.

This Midrash gives a second mystical interpretation of Hadrach. "Hadrach (חֲדָר) is the King Messiah, Who is to guide (לְהַדְרִיךְ) all who come into the world by repentance before God, Blessed for ever." Ib. "R. Johanan was a disciple of the elder Hillel and Shammai, according to the Pirké Aboth c. 2; prince of Israel for 40 years, 5 of them after the destruction of the temple. Rashi on cod. Ibn Ezra has; "the rest of the prophecy shall be on Damascus, for this prophecy shall be fulfilled, connected with the second temple; For the eyes of man are to the Lord; for many from the men of Damascus shall return to worship the Lord and to turn to the obedience of Israel in Jerusalem." And so Kimchi, "Damascus shall be His resting-place, i. e. the Shechinah of His glory and prophecy."

And Zidon. Zidon, although probably older than Tyre<sup>1</sup>, is here spoken of parenthetically, as subordinate. Perhaps, owing to its situation, it was a wealthy<sup>2</sup>, rather than a strong place. Its name is "Fishing-town;" in Joshua, it is called "the great<sup>3</sup>," perhaps the metropolis; while Tyre is named from its strength<sup>4</sup>. It infected Israel with its idolatry<sup>5</sup>, and is mentioned among the nations who oppressed them and from whom God delivered them on their prayers<sup>6</sup>, probably under Jabin. In the time of the Judges, it, not Tyre, was looked to for protection<sup>7</sup>. In the times of Ezekiel it had become subordinate, furnishing "rowers<sup>8</sup>" to Tyre; but Esarhaddon, about 80 years before, boasts that he had taken it, destroyed its inhabitants, and repeopled it with men from the East, building a new city which he called by his own name<sup>9</sup>. Tyre too had been taken by Nebuchadnezzar<sup>10</sup>. At the restoration from the captivity, Sidon had the first place<sup>11</sup>, which it retained in the time of Xerxes<sup>12</sup>. But Artaxerxes Ochus gained possession of it by treachery, when all Phœnicia revolted from Persia, and, besides those crucified, 40,000 of its inhabitants perished by their own hands<sup>13</sup>, twenty years before the invasion of Alexander, to whom it submitted willingly<sup>14</sup>.

The prophet having named Tyre and Zidon together, yet continues as to Tyre alone, as being alone of account in the days of which he is speaking, those of Alexander.

Although, rather, because she is very wise. Man's own wisdom is his foolishness and destruction, as the foolishness of God is his wisdom and salvation. God<sup>15</sup> taketh the wise in their own craftiness. <sup>16</sup>For after that, in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. Of the Hagarrenes it is said, they<sup>17</sup> seek wisdom upon earth; none of these know the way of wisdom, or remember her paths. The wisdom of Tyre was the source of her pride, and so of her destruction also. <sup>18</sup>Because thy heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a god, I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas; yet thou art a man and not God, though thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God; behold thou art wiser than Daniel, there is no secret that they can hide from thee. Therefore I will bring strangers upon thee—they shall bring thee down to the pit. So of Edom Obadiah says, <sup>19</sup>The pride of thy heart hath deceived thee, thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock. Shall I not destroy the wise men out of Edom, and understanding out of the mount of Esau?

3. And Tyre did build herself a stronghold. She built it for herself, not for God, and trusted to it, not to God, and so its strength brought her the greater fall. The words in Hebrew express yet more. "Tyre" (Zor) lit. "the rock," built herself mazor, tower, a rock-like fort, as it were, a rock upon a rock for exceeding strength, binding her together. <sup>20</sup>The walls, 150 feet high and of breadth proportionate, compacted of large stones, embedded in gypsum," seemed to defy an enemy who could only approach her by sea. <sup>21</sup>In order to make the wall twice as strong, they built a second wall ten cubits broad, leaving a space between of five cubits, which they filled with stones and earth." Yet high walls do not fence in only; they also hem in. Mazor is both "a stronghold" and "a siege." Wealth and strength, without God, do but invite and embitter the spoiler and the conqueror.

And she heaped up silver as the dust, and fine gold as the mire of the streets. Though he heap up silver as the dust, Job says<sup>22</sup>. The King, Solomon, made silver in Jerusalem as stones<sup>23</sup>. Through her manifold commerce she gathered to herself wealth, as abundant as the mire and the dust, and as valueless. "Gold and silver," said a heathen, "are but red and white earth." Its strength was its destruction. Tyre determined to resist Alexander, <sup>24</sup>trusting in the strength of the island, and the stores which they had laid up," the strength within and without, of which the Prophet speaks.

4. Behold. Such were the preparations of Tyre. Over against them, as it were, the prophet sets before our eyes the counsels of God. <sup>25</sup>Since they had severed themselves from the providence of God, they were now to experience His power." The Lord will cast her out<sup>26</sup>, lit. deprive her of her possessions, give her an heir of what she had amassed, viz: the enemy; and he will smite her power or wealth<sup>27</sup>, of which Ezekiel says, <sup>28</sup>With thy wisdom and with thine understanding thou hast gotten thee riches, and hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures: by the greatness of thy wisdom and by thy traffic thou hast increased thy riches, and thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches<sup>29</sup>. All wherein she relied, and so too the stronghold itself, God would smite in the sea. The sea was her confidence and boast. She said<sup>30</sup> I am a god; I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas.

The scene of her pride was to be that of her overthrow; the waves, which girt her round, should bury her ruins and wash over her site. Even in the sea the hand of God should find her, and smite her in it, and into it, and so that she should abide in it. <sup>31</sup>They mocked at the king, as though he thought to prevail against Neptune [the sea]. <sup>32</sup>Ye despise this land-army, through confidence in the place, that ye dwell in an island," was the message of Alexander, "but soon will I shew you that ye dwell on a continent."

Every device had been put in force in its defence: the versatility by which the inhabitants of an island, some 2½ miles in circumference, held at bay the conqueror of the battle of Issus with unlimited resources, <sup>33</sup>engineers from Cyprus and all Phœnicia," and <sup>34</sup>a fleet of 180 ships from Cyprus," attests the wisdom in which the prophet says, she

Divers who should loosen the mole; grappling hooks and nets to entangle near-assailants; melted metal or heated sand to penetrate between the joints of their armour; bags of sea-weed to deaden the blows of the battering machines; a fire-ship navigated so as to destroy the works of the enemy, while its sailors escaped; fiery arrows; wheels set in continual motion, to turn aside the missiles against them<sup>2</sup>, bear witness to an unwearied inventiveness of defence. The temporary failures might have shaken any mind but Alexander's (who is even said to have hesitated<sup>3</sup>) but that he dared not, by abandoning the enterprise, lose the prestige of victory. Yet all ended in the massacre of 6, 7, or 8000 of her men, the crucifixion of 2000, the sale of the rest, whether 13,000 or 30,000, into slavery<sup>4</sup>. Tyre, being a merchant-city, the mother-city of the cities of the African coast and in Spain, its desolation caused the more terror<sup>8</sup>.

And the [a] king shall perish from Gaza, i.e. it shall have no more kings. It had been the policy of the world-empires to have tributary kings in the petty kingdoms which they conquered, thus providing for their continued tranquil submission to themselves<sup>9</sup>. The internal government remained as before: the people felt no difference, except as to the payment of the tribute. The policy is expressed by the title "king of kings," which they successively bore. Sennacherib speaks of the kings of Ascalon, Ekron and Gaza<sup>10</sup>. A contemporary of Alexander<sup>11</sup> mentions, that the king of Gaza was brought alive to Alexander on its capture. Alexander's policy was essentially different from that of the world-monarchs before him. They desired only to hold an empire as wide as possible, leaving the native kings, if they could; and only, if these were intractable, placing their own lieutenants. Alexander's policy was to blend East and West into one<sup>12</sup>. These petty sovereignties, so many insulated centres of mutual repulsion, were essentially at variance with this plan, and so this remnant of sovereignty of 1500 years was taken away by him, when, after a siege in which he himself was twice wounded, he took it. Alexander wholly depopulated it, and re-peopled the city with strangers.

And Ashkelon shall not be inhabited. Ashkelon yielded at once to Jonathan, when he "camped against it<sup>13</sup>" after he had taken and "burned Ashdod and the cities round about it." In another expedition of Jonathan its inhabitants "<sup>14</sup>met him honourably," while "they of Gaza shut him out" at first. "<sup>15</sup>Simon—passed through the country unto Ascalon, and the holds there adjoining," without resistance, whereas "he turned aside to Joppe, and won it." He placed Jews in Gaza, but of Ascalon nothing is said. The ruins of a Christian city, built on its site, "khirbet-Ascalon," have been lately discovered in the hills near Tell Zakariyeh<sup>16</sup>, and so, a little South of Timnath, a Philistine city in the days of Samson, whence Samson went to it, to gain the 30 changes of raiment<sup>17</sup>. Commentators have assigned reasons, why Samson might have gone so far as the maritime Ascalon, whereas, in fact, he went to a city close by.

That city, in 536 A.D., had its Bishop<sup>18</sup>. "<sup>19</sup>The site shews the remains of an early Christian Church or convent:" as a great lintel of stone<sup>20</sup>, resembling somewhat the Maltese Cross, lies on the ground." It was probably destroyed by the inundation of Mohammedan conquest. In 1163 A.D. it was a ruin. The distance of the ruins from the Ascalon Maiumas corresponds to that assigned by Benjamin of Tudela, being twice the distance of that city from Ashdod<sup>21</sup>; but since he was at Beth Jibrin<sup>22</sup>, he must have been not far from the spot where it has been lately discovered<sup>23</sup>. The Ashkelon, which was Herod's birth-place and which he beautified, must have been the well-known city by the sea; since the distance from Jerusalem assigned by Josephus<sup>24</sup> is too great for the old Ashkelon, and he speaks of it as on the sea<sup>25</sup>.

6. And a bastard shall dwell at Ashdod<sup>26</sup>. The "mamzer" was one born unlawfully, whether out of marriage, or in forbidden marriage, or in adultery<sup>27</sup>. Here it is, probably, like

ch. 2. 5.

our "spurious brood<sup>1</sup>;" whether it was so itself or in the eyes of the Ashdodites; whence he adds,

I will cut off the pride of the Philistines. Pride would survive the ruin of their country, the capture of their cities, the loss of independence. It would not survive the loss of their nationality; for they themselves would not be the same people, who were proud of their long descent and their victories over Israel. The breaking down of nationalities, which was the policy of Alexander, was an instrument in God's hands in cutting off their pride.

7. And I will take away his bloods out of his mouth. The abominations being idol-sacrifices<sup>2</sup>, the bloods will also be, the blood mingled with the wine of sacrifices, of which David says, <sup>3</sup> Their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer; and Ezekiel unites the offences, <sup>4</sup> "Ye eat with the blood, and lift up your eyes toward your idols, and shed blood."

But he that remaineth, better, And he too shall remain over to our God. Of the Philistines too, as of Israel, a remnant shall be saved. After this visitation their idolatry should cease; God speaks of the Philistine nation as one man; He would wring his idol-sacrifices and idol-enjoyments from him; he should exist as a nation, but as God's.

And he shall be as a governor in Judah, lit. "a captain of a thousand," merged in Judah as in a larger whole, as each tribe was divided into its "thousands," yet intimately blended, in no inferior position, with the people of God, as each converted nation became an integral yet unseparated whole in the people of God.

And Ekron as a Jebusite. Ekron was apparently the least important of the few remaining Philistine cities<sup>5</sup>; yet he shall be, as those of the Canaanite nations who were not destroyed, nor fled, but in the very capital and centre of Israel's worship, <sup>6</sup> dwelt with the children of Benjamin and Judah, and were, as a type of the future conversion and absorption of the heathen, incorporated into Judah.

8. And I will encamp about my house (for<sup>7</sup> my house's sake) because of the army<sup>8</sup>; because, it is added in explanation, of him that passeth by and of him that returneth; Alexander, who passed by with his army, on his way to Egypt, and returned, having founded Alexandria.

It was a most eventful march; one of the most eventful in the history of mankind. The destruction of the Persian empire, for which it prepared, was in itself of little moment; Alexander's own empire was very brief. As Daniel had foretold<sup>9</sup>, he came, cast down Persia to the ground, waxed very great, and when he was strong, the great horn was broken. But with the marvellous perception which characterised him, he saw and impressed upon his successors the dependability of the Jewish people. When he came into Judæa, he sent to the high priest for aid against Tyre and for the like tribute as he used to pay to Darius, promising that he would not repent of choosing the friendship of the Macedonians<sup>10</sup>. The high priest refused on the ground of the oath, by which his people were bound in fealty to the earthly king of kings, whom Alexander came to subdue. Alexander threatened to teach all, through its fate, to whom fealty was due. This, after the conquest of Gaza, he prepared to fulfil. He came, he saw, he was conquered. <sup>11</sup> Jaddua and his people prayed to God. Taught by God in a dream not to fear, he went to meet the conqueror. The gates of the city were thrown open. There marched out, not an army such as encountered the Romans, but as he had been taught, a multitude in white garments, and the priests going before in their raiment of fine linen. The high priest, in his apparel of purple and gold, having on his head the mitre, and on it the golden plate<sup>12</sup>, whereon was written the name of God, advanced alone, and the Conqueror, who was expected to give the city to be plundered, and the high priest to be insulted and slain, kissed the name of God, recognising in the priest one whom he had seen in the like dress in a dream, who had bidden him, when hesitating, cross to Asia; for that he would go before his army and deliver the Persian empire to him.

The result is related to have been, that Alexander promised to allow the Jews in Judæa to live according to their own laws, remitted the tribute of every seventh year, acceded beforehand to the terms to be proposed by those in Babylonia and Media, and that many Jews joined his army, under condition that they might live under their own laws.

Rationalism, while it remains such, cannot admit of Daniel's prophecies which the high priest shewed him, declaring that a Greek should destroy the Persian empire, which Alexander rightly interpreted of himself. But the facts remain; that the conqueror, who, above most, gave way to his anger, bestowed privileges almost incredible on a nation, which under the Medes and Persians had been <sup>13</sup> "the most despised part of the enslaved;" made them equal in privileges to his own Macedonians<sup>14</sup>, who could hardly brook the absorption of the Persians, although in inferior condition, among genealogies in Jerusalem, and there was written in it, "M., a mamzer from a man's wife;" to confirm the words of R. Joshua, in Yebamoth c. 4, § 13. R. Akiba's opinion was, that "it was any near of kin, with whom marriage was forbidden;" Simon the Temanite said, "any liable to excision at the hands of God." Ib. in Ges. Thes. p. 781 sub v. Of the etymologies, Kimchi's is perhaps the most probable, that it is from מ, the two D's being added, as in מרדכי, Joel i. 17.

<sup>1</sup> The Lxx. Jon. Syr. agree in the rendering, "strangers," Jon. and the Syr. using the same word; מְרִצִּים Peeth.; "and the children of Israel shall dwell in Ashdod, who were in it, as strangers" (מְרִצִּים). Jon. Aq. Symm. Theod. retain the Hebrew word, as do Onk. and Sam. in Deut.

<sup>2</sup> מַזְבֵּחַ always retains its appellative sense. It is not merely "idols," but idols, in that they were "abominations." It is generally in constr., "the abomination of" such a nation, 1 Kgs xi. 5, 7 [bis], 2 Kgs xxiii. 13 [bis], "the abomination of his, their, eyes," Ezek. xx. 7, 8; or with the personal pronoun as here, Deut. xxix. 16, Is. lxvi. 3, Jer. [5 times] Ezek. [6 times]. In a few places it stands absolutely, in its original appellative sense, Nah. iii. 6; allusively to the idol abominations, Hos. ix. 10; with art. the [idol] abominations (2 Kgs xxiii. 24, 2 Chr. xv. 8); and the abomination of desolation. Dan. ix. 27, xi. 31, xii. 11. [all]. <sup>3</sup> Ps. xvi. 4. <sup>4</sup> Ezek. xxxiii. 25.

<sup>8</sup> מִצֵּי, for מִצֵּי, according to the Masorites as in the verb also, Is. xxix. 7. So Symm. καλὸν στρατὸς. The context also favours the reading; for unless the passers by and returners had been a powerful army, there had been no occasion for that defence of which God speaks. The correction מִצֵּי would come to the same, "a military post;" only, in actual use, this is a "fort," "fortress," 1 Sam. xiv. 12, i. q. מִצֵּי Ib. xiii. 23, xiv. 1, 4, 6, 11, 15, 2 Sam. xxiii. 14. מִצֵּי Is. xxix. 8, is a work on the offensive, not defensive. Ewald comes to the same sense, that God would protect her against any one coming against her. <sup>9</sup> Dan. viii. 7, 8. <sup>10</sup> Jos. Ant. xi. 8. 3. <sup>11</sup> Ib. n. 5.

<sup>12</sup> Justin says, "then he, Alexander, goes to Syria, where many kings of the East with fillets met him. Of these, according to their deserts, he received some into alliance; others he deprived of their kingdom, putting other kings in their place." xi. 10.

<sup>13</sup> Tacitus limits the description to the time, "when the East belonged to the Assyrians, Medes and Persians." Hist. v. 8.

<sup>14</sup> "Alexander gave them (the Jews) a place to dwell in, and they obtained equal rank with the Macedonians. I know not what Apion would have said, had they been settled near the Necropolis and not near the palace, and were not their race now too called 'Macedonians.' If then he (Apion) has read the Epistles of Alexander the King, and has met with the rescripts of Ptolemy Lagi and the kings after him, and has lighted on the column which stands in Alexandria and contains the rights given by the great Caesar to the Jews; if, I say, themselves<sup>1</sup>. The most despised of the enslaved became the most trusted of the trusted. They became a large portion of the second and third then known cities of the world. They became Alexandrians, Antiochenes, Ephesians<sup>2</sup>, without ceasing to be Jews. The law commanded faithfulness to oaths, and they who despised their religion respected its fruits.

The immediate successors of Alexander, Ptolemy Lagi<sup>3</sup> and Antiochus Nicator, followed his policy; Ptolemy especially on the ground of the fealty shewn to Darius; Nicator, as having observed their faithfulness as soldiers, who had served with him<sup>4</sup>; but they were so enrolled on this visit to Jerusalem. The Heathen kings multiplied, in their own purpose, faithful subjects to themselves; in God's design, they prepared in Asia and Egypt a seed-plot for the Gospel. The settlement of the Jews at Alexandria formed the language of the Gospel; that wonderful blending of the depth of the Hebrew with the clearness and precision of the Greek. Everywhere the seed of the preparatory dispensation was sown, to be fostered, grow and ripen with the harvest of the Gospel.

For now have I seen with Mine eyes. This is the counterpart of what the Psalmists and pious men so often pray, <sup>6</sup>Awake to help me and behold; <sup>6</sup>Look down from heaven, behold and visit this vine; <sup>7</sup>Look upon my trouble from them that hate me; <sup>8</sup>Look upon my affliction and my trouble; look upon my enemies, for they are many; <sup>9</sup>Look upon my adversity and deliver me; <sup>10</sup>O Lord, behold my affliction; <sup>11</sup>Behold, O Lord, for I am in distress; <sup>12</sup>Look and behold my reproach; <sup>13</sup>Open Thine eyes, O Lord, and see; <sup>14</sup>Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of Thy holiness and glory. With God, compassion is so intrinsic an attribute, that He is pictured as looking away, when He does not put it forth. With God, to behold is to help.

9. From the protection, which God promised to His people and to His House, the Prophet passes on to Him Who was ever in his thoughts, and for Whose sake that people and temple were preserved. He had described the great conqueror of this world, sweeping along in his course of victory. In contrast with such as he, he now exhibits to his people the character and procession of their king. Rejoice greatly. Not with this world's joy. God never exhorts man to rejoice greatly in this world's fleeting joys. He

he knows these things, and, knowing them, has dared to write the contrary, he is unprincipled; if he knew nothing of them, he is ill-instructed." "Alexander collected some of our people there, not for want of such as should colonise the city which he founded with great earnestness. But carefully proving all as to good faith and probity, he gave this distinction to our people. For he honoured our nation, as Hecataeus too says of us, that, for the probity and good faith which the Jews evinced towards him, he gave them in addition the territory of Samaria to hold, free from tribute. And Ptolemy Lagi too was like-minded with Alexander as to those who dwelt in Alexandria." Jos. lb. This early equalising of the Jews with Alexandrians is recognised in the edict of Claudius; "Having learnt that the Jews in Alexandria were from the first called Alexandrians, having been settled there together with the Alexandrians straightway at the earliest period, and having received from the kings equal citizenship, as appeared plain both from their letters and from the ordinances," &c. [in Jos. Ant. xix. 5, 2.] in Pusey's "Daniel the Prophet," p. 146, n. 3. <sup>1</sup> Arr. vii. 6. <sup>2</sup> "His (Apion's) marvelling, how, being Jews, they were called Alexandrians, betrays the same ignorance. For all who are invited into a given colony, much as they differ in race, take their name from its founders. Those of us, who dwell at Antioch, are called Antiochenes. For Seleucus, the founder, gave them citizenship. And so too in Ephesus, and the rest of Ionia, they bear the same name with the natives, the Successors (of Alexander) having given it to them," Jos. c. Ap. ii. 4. allows us to be glad, as children, before Him; He permits such buoyancy of heart, if innocent; but He does not command it. Now He commands His people to burst out into a jubilee of rejoicing: they were to dance and shout for gladness of spirit; "despising the poor exultation of this world and exulting with that exceeding" yet chaste joy, which befits the true bliss to be brought by their King and Saviour. <sup>15</sup>This word, greatly, means that there should be no measure whatever in their exultation; for the exultation of the children of the bridegroom is far unlike to the exultation of the children of this world." <sup>16</sup>He biddeth the spiritual Zion rejoice, inasmuch as dejection was removed. For what cause of sorrow is there, when sin has been removed, death trampled under foot, and human nature called to the dignity of freedom, and crowned with the grace of adoption and illumined with the heavenly gift?"

Behold, thy king cometh unto thee. He does not say "a king," but "thy king;" thy king, thine own, the long-promised, the long-expected; He Who, when they had kings of their own, given them by God, had been promised as the king<sup>17</sup>; <sup>18</sup>the righteous Ruler among men, of the seed of David; He Who, above all other kings, was their King and Saviour; Whose kingdom was to absorb in itself all kingdoms of the earth; the King of kings, and Lord of lords. Her king was to come to her. He was in a manner then "of her," and "not of her;" "of her," since He was to be her king, "not of her," since He was to "come to her." As Man, He was born of her: as God, the Word made flesh, He came to her. <sup>19</sup>To thee, to be manifest unto thee<sup>20</sup>; to be thine by communion of nature<sup>21</sup>; as He is thine, by the earnest of the Eternal Spirit and the gift of the Father, to procure thy good. <sup>22</sup>Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given. Of this, His entry into Jerusalem was an image. But how should He come? "He shall come to thee," says an old Jewish writing<sup>23</sup>, "to atone thee; He shall come to thee, to upraise thee; He shall come to thee, to raise thee up to His temple, and to espouse thee with an everlasting espousal."

He is just and having salvation. Just or righteous, and the Fountain of justice or righteousness. For what He is, that He diffuseth. Righteousness which God Is, and righteousness which God, made Man, imparts, are often blended in Holy Scripture<sup>24</sup>. This is also the source of the exceeding <sup>3</sup> Ptolemy Lagi, "understanding that those from Jerusalem were most reliable as to their oaths and fealty, (from the answer which they gave to the embassy of Alexander after he had conquered Darius,) having located many of them in the garrisons and given them equal rights of citizenship with the Macedonians in Alexandria, took an oath of them that they would keep fealty to the descendants of him who gave them this charge. And no few of the other Jews came of their own accord into Egypt, invited by the goodness of the soil and the liberality of Ptolemy." Jos. Ant. xii. 1. 15. p. 145, n. 8.

<sup>4</sup> "They (the Jews) obtained the honour from the kings of Asia also, having served in the army with them. For Seleucus Nicator, in the cities which he founded in Asia and in lower Syria, and in the metropolis itself, Antioch, conferred on them citizenship, and made them rank with the Macedonians and Greeks who were settled therein, so that this citizenship remains even now also." joy. For the coming of their king in righteousness would be, to sinful man, a cause, not of joy but of fear. This was the source of the Angel's message of joy; <sup>1</sup> I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; for unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour.

He is just, <sup>2</sup> "because in the Divine Nature, He is the Fountain of all holiness and justice." <sup>3</sup> "As Thou art righteous Thyself, Thou orderest all things righteously. For Thy power is the beginning of righteousness." According to the nature which He took, He was also most just; for He ever sought the glory of the Father, and <sup>4</sup> He did no sin, neither was guile found in His Mouth. In the way also of justice He satisfied for men, delivering Himself for their faults to the pain of the most bitter death, to satisfy the honour of the Divine Majesty, so that sin should not remain unpunished. Hence He saith of Himself; <sup>5</sup> He that seeketh His glory that sent Him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in Him. Of Whom also Stephen said to the Jews, <sup>6</sup> Your fathers slew them which shewed before of the coming of the Just One, of Whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers. Righteousness is an awful attribute of God. It is a glory and perfection of His Being, for the perfect to gaze on and adore. Mercy, issuing in our salvation, is the attribute which draws us sinners. And this lies in the promise that He should come to them, however the one word nosha' be rendered <sup>7</sup>. The meaning of such a prophecy as this is secure, independent of single words. The whole context implies, that He should come as a ruler and deliverer, whether the word nosha' signify "endued with salvation," (whereas the old versions rendered it, "Saviour") or whether it be, "saved." For as He came, not for Himself but for us, so, in as far as He could be said to be saved, He was "saved," not for Himself but for us. Of our Lord, as Man, it is, in like way, said, <sup>8</sup> Thou shalt not leave His soul in Hell, or, Whom God raised up, having loosed the pains of death, because it was not possible that He should be holden of it. As Man, He was raised from the dead; as God, He raised Himself from the dead, for our sakes, for whom He died. For us, He was born a Saviour; for us, He was endued with salvation; for us, He was saved from being held of death; in like way as, of His Human Nature, the Apostle says, <sup>9</sup> He was heard, in that He feared. To us, as sinners, it is happiest to hear of the Saviour; but the most literal meaning "saved" has its own proper comfort: for it implies the sufferings, by which that salvation was procured, and so it contains a hint of the teaching by Isaiah, He was taken from oppression and from judgement; upon which that same wide reign follows, of which David, in his picture of the Passion <sup>11</sup>, and Isaiah <sup>12</sup> prophesy. <sup>13</sup> "This 'saved' does not imply, that He obtained salvation for His own otherwise than from Himself. Mine own arm, He saith in Isaiah, <sup>14</sup> brought salvation unto Me. But as Man, He obtained salvation from the indwelling Godhead. For when He destroyed the might of death, when, rising from the dead, He ascended into heaven, when He took on Him the everlasting kingdom of heaven and earth, He obtained salvation from the glory of the Father, i.e. from His own Divinity, to impart it to all His. The Hebrew word then in no way diminishes the amplitude of His dignity. For we confess, that the Human Nature of Christ had that everlasting glory added to It from His Divine Nature, so that He should not only be Himself adorned with those everlasting gifts, but should become the cause of everlasting salvation to all who obey Him."

Lowly. Outward lowliness of condition, is, through the grace of God, the best fosterer of the inward. The word lowly wonderfully expresses the union of both; lowness of outward state with lowliness of soul. The Hebrew word expresses the condition of one, who is bowed down, brought low through oppression, affliction, desolation, poverty, persecution, bereavement; but only if, at the same time, he had in him the fruit of all these, in lowliness of mind, submission to God, piety. Thus our Lord pronounces the blessedness of "the poor" and "the poor in spirit," i.e. poor in estate, who are poor in soul also. But in no case does it express lowliness of mind without lowness of condition. One lowly, who was not afflicted, would never be so called. The Prophet then declares that their king should come to them in a poor condition, stricken, smitten, and afflicted <sup>15</sup>, and with the special grace of that condition, meekness, gentleness and lowliness of soul; and our Lord bids us, <sup>16</sup> Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly of heart. <sup>17</sup> "He saith of Himself in the Gospel, <sup>17</sup> The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His Head. <sup>18</sup> For though He was rich, He for our sakes became poor, that we through His poverty might be rich.

Lowly and riding upon an ass. Kings of the earth ride in state. The days were long since by, when the sons of the judges rode on asses <sup>19</sup>. Even then the more distinguished rode on white (i.e. roan <sup>20</sup>) asses. The mule, as a taller animal, was used by David <sup>21</sup> and his sons <sup>22</sup>, while asses were used for his household <sup>23</sup>, and by Ziba, Shimei, Mephibosheth, Ahitophel <sup>24</sup>, and, later, by the old prophet of Bethel <sup>25</sup>. David had reserved horses for 100 chariots <sup>26</sup>, after the defeat of the Syrians, but he himself did not use them. Absalom employed chariots and horses <sup>27</sup> as part of his pomp, when preparing to displace his father; and Solomon multiplied them <sup>28</sup>. He speaks of it as an indignity or reverse; <sup>29</sup> I have seen servants upon horses, and princes walking, as servants, upon the earth. The burial of an ass became a proverb for a disgraced end <sup>30</sup>. There is no instance in which a king rode on an ass, save He Whose kingdom was not of this world. The prophecy, then, was framed to prepare the Jews to expect a prophet-king, not a king of this world. Their eyes were fixed on this passage. In the Talmud, in their traditional interpretations, and in their mystical books, they dwelt on these words. The mention of the ass, elsewhere, seemed to them typical of this ass, on which their Messiah should ride. "If a man in a dream seeth an ass," says the Talmud <sup>31</sup>, "he shall see salvation."

<sup>31</sup> Berachoth f. 56. 2 (in Schöttgen ad loc.). There was a general consent among the Jews,

It is an instance of a prophecy which, humanly speaking, a false Messiah could have fulfilled, but which, from its nature, none would fulfil, save the True. For their minds were set on earthly glory and worldly greatness: it would have been inconsistent with the claims of one, whose kingdom was of this world. It belonged to the character of Him, Who was buffeted, mocked, scourged, spit upon, crucified, died for us, and rose again. It was Divine humiliation, which, in the purpose of God, was to be compensated by Divine power. In itself it would, if insulated, have been unmeaning. The

that this prophecy related to the Messiah. R. Joseph (probably "the pious," the disciple of Jochanan, the disciple of Hillel, Wolf, Bibl. Hebr. ii. 848, 844) used it as an argument against R. Hillel, who disbelieved in any Messiah. "R. Hillel, 'Israel has no Messiah, for they enjoyed him in the days of Hezekiah.' R. Joseph said, 'Lord, forgive R. Hillel! When did Hezekiah live? In [the time of] the first temple. But Zechariah prophesied in [the time of] the second temple; 'Rejoice greatly, daughter of Zion, behold, thy king cometh unto thee, righteous and nosha.'" He said also, "O that he may come, and that I may be worthy to sit in the shadow of the dung of his ass." Sanhedrin, f. 99. 1. "R. Alexandri said, that R. Joshua ben Levi set against each other the Scriptures, 'Lo there came with the clouds of heaven one like unto the Son of Man,' and that, 'lowly and riding on an ass.' Deserve he [Israel], 'with the clouds of heaven; deserve he not, 'lowly and riding on an ass.'" Ib. f. 98. "All these goods, which I will do to them through the merits of the Messiah, shall be extended in all those years." R. Jannai (about A.D. 130) said from Raf, "whoever looketh for salvation, God will give him rest in the garden of Eden, according to that, 'I will feed my flock and cause them to lie down' (Ezek. xxxiv. 15.) 'Just and nosha.' This is the Messiah, who justifieth his judgement against Israel because they mocked him, because he sat in prison, so he is called 'just.' But why nosha, but that he justifieth the judgement upon them. He says to them, 'ye are my sons; are ye not all to be saved only by the mercy of the Holy One, blessed be He?' 'Afflicted and riding on an ass.' This is the Messiah. But why is his name called נש, 'afflicted?' Because he was afflicted all those years in prison, and the transgressors of Israel mocked him, because he rideth upon an ass on account of the wicked who have no desert." (a dislocated passage, Schöttg. says, of the Pesikta Rabbathi f. 61. 1. 2. in Schöttg. de Messia, loci gen. n. xxvii. p. 136. The Hebrew of the latter part is given by Wünsche d. Leiden des Messias p. 66.) And in a remarkable passage on Cant. i. 4, "Let us exult and rejoice in thee." "The Matrona is like a royal bride, whose husband the king, her sons and sons-in-law, were gone beyond sea. When they brought her word that her sons were returned, she said, 'What cause of joy have I? Let my daughters-in-law rejoice!' Another messenger came, that her sons-in-law were returned, she answered, 'What cause of joy have I? Let my daughters rejoice!' But when they told her that the king, her husband, was returned, she said, 'This is perfect joy, a joy above all joys!' So also in the time to come, the time of the Messiah, the prophets shall come to Jerusalem and say, (Is. lx. 4) 'thy sons shall come from far; she will answer, 'What cause of joy have I?' The prophets will add, 'Thy daughters shall be nurtured by thy side; she will answer in like way. But when they shall say to her, 'Behold, thy king cometh unto thee, just and a Saviour,' then she shall say, 'This is perfect joy; as in, 'Exult greatly, daughter of Zion,' and elsewhere, 'Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion.' Then she shall say, 'I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God (Is. lxi. 10.)' Shur hasshurim Rabba fol. 7. 3 (in Schöttg. loc. gen. n. v., Martini f. 512). They quote the prophecy also as to the union of the royal and priestly offices of the Messiah. The Beresith Rabba had on Gen. xiv. 18, "And Melchizedec, king of Salem." This is the name of Shem, the son of Noah. What would that teach, 'he brought forth bread and wine?' R. Samuel Bar Nachman said, He delivered to him the ways of the priesthood, and he offered bread and wine to God, as it is said, 'He was priest of the most High God, king of Salem.'—Otherwise; Melchizedec; this is what Scripture saith, 'The Lord sware and will not repent, 'Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedec.' And who is he? This is the king, righteous and nosha, the king Messiah, according to, 'Behold thy king cometh unto thee, righteous and nosha.' And what would that teach, 'He brought forth bread and wine?' It is as is said, 'Be there a handful of corn upon the earth.' (Ps. lxxii. 16.) This is what is written, 'And he was a priest of the most High God.' (in Mart. f. 654 end.) Or they argue from nosha, as to the free mercy of God, "God says to Israel, If your merit is not of such account, I do it for my own sake; for day by day, when you are in trouble, I am with you, as in, 'I am with him in trouble,' (Ps. xci. 15); and so I deliver myself, 'And he saw that there was no one, and wondered' (Is. lix. 16); and elsewhere, 'Exult greatly, daughter of Zion—behold thy king cometh unto thee, just and nosha.' It is not written וְיָשָׁע ["and saving"] but וְיָשָׁע ["and saved"]; whereby it is hinted that, though your merits are not of such account, God will act for His own sake, according to, 'For my salvation is near to come.'" (Shemoth Rabba sect. 30. fol. 129. 1. Schöttg. loc. gen. n. ix.) Martini quotes a like saying from the Beresith Rabba on Gen. xlix. 8. "R. Berachiah the priest, son of Rabbi, said, See what is written, 'Rejoice greatly &c.' It is not written, 'Just and nosha, a Saviour,' but 'Just and nosha saved,' and thus he says, (Is. lxii. 11.) 'Say ye to the daughter of Zion—it is not written, 'thy Saviour (וְיָשָׁע) cometh,' but, 'Behold thy salvation (וְיָשָׁע) cometh.' As if one might so speak, 'Israel was redeemed, and it is as if God were redeemed,' and this is one of the hard Scriptures, that the salvation of Israel is the salvation of God." fol. 518. Martini quotes also from a comment on Isaiah lvii. 1. "The righteous perisheth." "This is Messiah, of Whom it is said, 'Just and saved.'" f. 334.

In other places, the riding upon the ass is dwelt upon. Midrash Coheleth on Eccl. i. 9. f. 73. 3. "R. Berachiah said from R. Isaac, As was the first redeemer, so also shall be the last redeemer. What did the first redeemer? (Ex. iv. 20.) 'And Moses took his wife and his sons and placed them on an ass; the second, as is written, 'lowly and riding on an ass.'" (Martini f. 380, and 690, Schöttg. Hor. Hebr. on S. Matt. xxi. 5.) In the Midrash Shemuel

f. 66. 1. the saying is ascribed to R. Levi (Schöttg. on this place). And the Pirke R. Eliezer c. 31, of Abraham's ass, "This is the ass, on which the son of David shall ride, according to, 'Rejoice greatly, daughter of Zion.'" (Ib.) The Zohar owns that the prophecy relates to the Messiah, but apologises for it. "It is not the custom that the king and his Matrona should ride on an ass, but rather on horses, as in (Hab. in. 7.) 'For thou shalt ride on thy horses, and thy chariots are salvation.' For they do not esteem a matrona so slightly, that she should ride on an ass, as the king willeth not to ride on an ass, like one of the people. And therefore it is said of the Messiah, 'Poor and riding upon an ass.' And he is not there called king, until he ride upon his horses, which are the people of Israel." (on Levit. f. 38. col. 151. in Schöttg. de Mess. vi. 213. p. 543.) Or they say great things of the ass. "This ass is son of the she-ass, which was created within the six days in the twilight. This is the ass, which Abraham saddled, when he purposed to sacrifice Isaac. This is the ass, on which Moses was carried when he went to Egypt. This is the ass, on which the son of David shall ride hereafter." Yalkut Reubeni (l. 79, 3, 4 on Exod. iv. 20 in Schöttg. on S. Matt. xxi. 5.) They connect it with Balaam's ass. "This is the ass destined for the Messiah, as it is written, 'Poor and riding on an ass.'" (Zohar Num. f. 83, col. 332.) Or they speak of his reigning thereon. "This is the ass, on which the Messiah shall reign, as it is written, 'Poor and riding on an ass.'" (Zohar Num. f. 83, col. 332 (on Deut. xxii. 10.) in Schöttg. de Messia vi. 2. 12. p. 543. The mention of an 'ass' in Holy Scripture suggests the thought of this prophecy, as relating to the Son of David. "And I have oxen and asses." Messiah son of David is hinted at here, of whom it is written, 'Meek and riding upon an ass.'" (Tanchuma on Gen. xxii. 6. f. 12. 2. (in Schöttg. on S. Matt. xxi. 5.) And the Beresith Rabba on Gen. xlix. 14, had, "By the foot of the ox (Is. xxxii. 20.) is understood Messiah son of Joseph, according to Deut. xxviii. 17. 'His glory is of the firstling of a bullock.' But by the foot of the ass, Messiah son of David, as in Zech., 'Meek and riding on an ass.'" (in Mart. f. 330. See also Schöttg. loc. gen. n. liii. and lxxiv.) "When he shall come, of Whom it is written, 'poor and riding upon an ass,' he will wash his garments in wine, i. e. make clear to them the words of the law, and his clothes in the blood of grapes, i. e. cleanse them from their errors." Ib. f. 95. col. 4. And in the Beresith ketama on Gen. xlix. 11. "binding his foal unto the vine and his ass's colt unto the choice vine." "This is he of whom it is written, 'poor and riding &c.' and he it is who planteth Israel as a choice vine (Jer. ii. 21): and how will he do it? As it is written, I will sprinkle clean water &c. Ezek. xxxvi. 21." Zohar Deut. f. 118. col. 471. in Schöttg. Hora 11. on Hab. ii. 3. p. 215. "After that depth (of the fulfilment of the vision, Hab. ii. 3.) was opened, whoever fell into it, never came up. The Messiah Ben David fell into it, with the Messiah Ben Joseph, of whom one is 'poor and riding upon an ass,' the other, 'the firstling of his bullock' (Deut. xxxiii. 17.), viz. the Messiah Ben Joseph. And this is alluded to in (Ex. xxi. 23.) 'If any one dig a pit and cover it not, and an ox or an ass fall therein.' And therefore the Messiah is called 'Bar naphli' 'son of the fallen.' The Beresith Rabba quoted the prophecy also in proof of His meekness. "When the king Messiah shall come to Jerusalem to save Israel, he shall bind his ass and ride upon it and come to Jerusalem, that he may conduct himself in lowliness, as it is said, 'lowly and riding upon an ass.' And his ass's foal unto the choice vine, when he shall come to gather the congregation of Israel, ["which is called a vine in that, 'Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt,' added in Schöttg. loc. gen. n. lix.] as in Zech. x. 8. 'I will hiss to them and will gather them,' then he shall ride on the foal of his ass, as in Zech. ix. 9. 'Rejoice greatly &c.' And it is not of old said of the Messiah, 'And in the clouds of heaven cometh one like the Son of man?' (Dan. vii. 13.) If Israel deserveth, 'He cometh with the clouds of heaven,' and if he deserveth not, 'lowly and riding on an ass.' on Gen. xlix. 11 in Martini f. 656 (or latter part as in Sanhedrin above). In times not far from our Lord, the Messiah seems to be mentioned, as under a well-known name, "he who is borne upon an ass." The Zohar quotes a revelation to R. Eliezer and R. Abba, "Did I not say to you that the precept of the king lasts, until he shall come who is borne on an ass?" (Zohar Gen. in Schöttg. loc. gen. n. xxxi. 7 p. 79.) And נש "afflicted" becomes an indication that the passage relates to the Messiah. Thus "the steps of the needy," נש, (Is. xxvi. 6.) is explained 'This is the Messiah, נש and riding on an ass.' (Beresith R. on Gen. xlix. 10. Mart. f. 656.) The Midrash Tehillim explains Ps. xc. 15, "according to the days of the Messiah." The word, נש 'hast afflicted us' corresponds to the other, 'poor and riding on an ass,' as if he would say 'according to the days of our afflicted.'" (in Schöttg. ad loc. p. 242.) and the Zohar Clouds on Eccl. ix. 14. sqq. "A little city is Zion; and a few men in it: these are the six days of the creation; and there came a great king against it, this is a certain one; and there was found in it a poor wise man." This is Messiah Ben David, as it is said, "poor and riding upon an ass" and 'the righteous perisheth' (Is. lvii. 1.) so long as the overflowing cometh not upon him, it is said, 'the river shall be wasted and dried up.' (Is. xix. 5.) 'The ass,' that is Samael, and the wise man, that is Messiah Ben David, and of him it is said, 'and he delivered the city by his wisdom.' And he shall be the deliverer of Messiah Ben Ephraim. And this is a redemption from above." (f. 63. 2. in Schöttg. loc. gen. n. 103. filled up from Wünsche Leiden d. Mess. p. 105.) Schöttgen ad loc. quotes also from the Zohar Deut. 117. col. 465.

The name נש is understood as indicating the Messiah. "By the word נש, 'ass' is indi-

Holy Ghost prophesied it, Jesus fulfilled it, to shew the Jews, of what nature His kingdom was. Hence the challenge; "Let us look at the prophecy, that in words, and that in act. What is the prophecy? Lo, thy king cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and upon a colt; not driving chariots as other kings, not in pomp nor attended by guards, but shewing herein also all gentleness. Ask the Jew then, What king, riding on an ass, came to Jerusalem? He could name none, save this One alone." An ancient writer says, "The Greeks too" (not the Jews only) "will laugh at us, saying, that 'The God of the Christians, Who is called Christ, sat upon an ass.'" The same mockery was probably intended by Sapor<sup>3</sup> king of Persia, which the Jews met with equal pride. The taunt continues till now. "It is not hid from you, O congregation of Christians, that 'rider upon an ass' indicates Christ." The Mohammedans appropriate the title "rider upon a camel" to Mohammad, as the grander animal<sup>4</sup>. The taunt of worshipping "Him Who sat upon an ass" was of the same class as those of the worship of the Crucified; "one dead and crucified, who could not save himself;" "a crucified Man," "that great Man," or (if it suited them so to speak) "that great sophist who was crucified," but Who now, for above 1800 years, reigns, "to all, the King; to all, the Judge; to all, Lord and God." "Christ did not only fulfil prophecies or plant the doctrines of truth, but did thereby also order our life for us, every where laying down for us rules of necessary use and, by all, correcting our life." Even Jews, having eated the king Messiah, according to that, 'poor and riding on an ass.' Beresith Rabba sect. 75, f. 74. 2. in Schottg. ad loc.

In later times, R. Saadiah Gaon said on Daniel vii. 13; "And behold with the clouds of heaven one came like a Son of man." This is the Messiah our righteousness, and is it not written of the Messiah, 'meek and riding upon an ass?' i.e. he shall come with meekness, for he shall not come on horses with pride; and 'the clouds of heaven' they are the Angels of the heavenly host. This is the exceeding greatness, which the Creator shall give to the Messiah." And Rashi says, "This cannot be explained, except of king Messiah; for it is said of him, 'and his dominion shall be from sea to sea'; but we do not find that such an one ruled over Israel in the time of the second house;" and (on Exod. iv. 20) "On an ass the Messiah will reveal himself, according to 'Meek and riding on an ass.'" (in Schottg. ad loc.) The first who referred it to any other was R. Moses Hacohen (A. D. 1148), whom Ibn Ezra quotes, as explaining it of "Nehemiah, the Tirshatha, because of him it was said, 'There is a king in Judah'; and that there was no mention of a horse, because he was poor;" which, Ibn Ezra says, was contrary to the fact in Nehemiah, and also the mention of the Greeks did not suit his times. Ibn Ezra says that, as far as he knows, "it was the king Judas the Hasmonaean, whose might suited that, 'I have made thee like the sword of a mighty man,' and his hand was mighty against the Greeks, and at first he had not wealth or horses." These were private opinions; for Ibn Ezra says, "The expositors are divided about it; some say, this king is Messiah ben David, and some say, Messiah ben Joseph." Both then agreed that he was a Messiah. Abarbanel says of Ibn Ezra; "I wonder that his ill intent blinded his understanding; for lo, Judas the Hasmonaean was never called king, all his days, much less of Zion; that had he prophesied of the Hasmonaean, what had he to do with Ephraim, since the kingdom of Ephraim was not in the second temple; also he did not speak peace to all nations, and did not rule from sea to sea." (On his own exposition see below.) Even R. Isaac (Chizz. Emunah c. 35 p. 298 Wagenseil), denying it as to our Lord, insists upon it as relating to their Messiah whom they looked for. R. Bechai says that "Jacob (Gen. xlix. 11) used the words 'his ass' and 'his colt' because it is written of him (the king Messiah) 'and upon a colt, the foal of an ass' (the same words being used, עַל כֶּמֶץ, Binat-hathorah ad loc. f. 30 col. 3, Amst.) R. Tanchum admits the difficulty of supposing it to relate to a future Messiah, or, since as a Jew, he could not interpret it of Jesus, of interpreting it of any one in the time of the second temple. "Some of the interpreters make this consolation an announcement of the Expected (may he soon be revealed!) and this is found in most of the Midrashoth of the ancient wise (blessed be their memory!) and the obvious meaning of his words, 'and his dominion is from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth' supports this; and some of them think, that from the context it relates to the circumstances of the second house, and this is supported by his words in the passage, 'And I will raise thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece,' which was in the second house, through the Hasmonaean, and now the empire of Greece is dispersed and gone. How then should he promise help against it in the future? And altogether the word of the prophecies admits of the interpretation. And many vary therein from one meaning to the other. And therefore we will mention how the language can be explained according to each opinion. And God, most High, knows what is hidden! The meaning then of 'meek and riding upon an ass' is, in my opinion, in the first way, beautiful; that 'meek' means one who rejected our Lord, saw this. "Not from poverty," says one<sup>8</sup>, "for behold the whole world shall be in his power—but from humility he will ride upon an ass; and further to shew that Israel [viz. the establishment of His kingdom or Church] shall not want horse nor chariot: therefore it is added, And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim and the horse from Jerusalem." And another<sup>9</sup>; "He, i.e. thy true king David, shall come to thee; and he mentions of his qualities that he shall be righteous and nosha'<sup>10</sup> in his wars; but his salvation shall not be from strength of his wars, for he shall come lowly and riding upon an ass'<sup>11</sup>. And riding on an ass, this is not on account of his want, but to shew that peace and truth shall be in his days; and therefore he says forthwith, And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim and the horse from Jerusalem; viz. that such shall be the peace and stillness in the world, that in Ephraim (i.e. the tribes) and in Jerusalem (i.e. the kingdom of Judah) they shall trust no more in horse and in rider, but in the name of God. And because it is the way of princes and chiefs to take example from the life of their kings, and to do as they, therefore he saith, that when the king Messiah rideth upon an ass, and has no pleasure in the strength of a horse, there will be no other in Jerusalem or the lands of the tribes, who will have pleasure in riding on a horse. And therefore he says, And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim and the horse from Jerusalem; and he assigns the reason for this, when he says, And the battle-bow shall be cut off; and he shall speak peace among the nations, i.e. there shall be

humbles himself, like (Is. lxvi. 2) 'And to this man will I look, to the humble (עָנָו) and contrite of spirit,' not weak in condition, on account then of his lowliness he will ride upon an ass.' (He compares the reduplication to that in Gen. xlix. 11.) "Or," he says, "the whole of this may be a metaphor for self-abjection, not an actual history; and what is known, is that this is his condition at first for his weakness and lowness; afterwards he will attain his later condition in strength and felicity. And so for the second way, this points to the return of the kingdom to Israel through the Hasmonaean, and his saying 'meek and riding upon an ass' indicates their first king, Judas the Hasmonaean, and he, at the outset, was weak, because he followed upon the oppression of Greece, according to what has been transmitted of that history; and that, 'his dominion shall be from sea to sea &c.' this is the kingdom to which he attained at last, and the extension of his house; and he means by this, 'from the red sea to the sea of the Philistines and from the river to the end of the habitable land'; and thus is, 'And from the river &c.' and thus his words, 'I will raise up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece,' will fit. And in the first way; 'from sea to sea' will be the encircling sea [the Ocean] and from the river which is the bound of the land of Israel to the furthest habitable earth." He answers the reference to Nehemiah, but ends by leaving the other two open. Moses ben Nachman quotes it in illustration of the contempt of the Messiah spoken of in Isaiah lii. 13. liii. 3. 7. "Their [the kings'] astonishment was shewn by mocking him, when he first arrived, and by asking, how one 'despised, meek and riding upon an ass,' could conquer all the kings of the world who had laid hold on Israel?—He was 'despised,' for he had no army and no people, but was 'meek and riding on an ass,' like the first redeemer Moses our master, when he entered into Egypt with his wife and children riding upon an ass. (Ex. iv. 20.) 'He was oppressed and he was afflicted,' for when he first comes 'meek and riding upon an ass,' the oppressors and officers of every city will come to him, and afflict him with revilings and insult, reproaching both him and the God in whose name he appears, like Moses our master, who, when Pharaoh said, I know not the Lord, answered him not." in Jewish Commentaries on Is. liii. p. 80, 81.

The modern school, which rids itself of definite prophecy, would have this relate to "the ideal Messiah." One does not see, how a literal prophecy, fulfilled to the letter, can relate to an ideal king; unless on the implied assumption, "There can be no prophecy of a definite event."

no more war in the world, because he shall  speak peace unto the nations, and by the word of his lips <sup>1</sup> he shall dispose peace unto them."

And upon a colt, the foal of an ass. The word rendered colt, as with us, signifies the young, as yet unbroken animal. In the fulfilment, our Lord directed His disciples to find <sup>2</sup> an ass tied, and a colt with her, whereon never man sat. The prophet foretold that He would ride on both animals; our Lord, by commanding both to be brought, shewed that the prophet had a special meaning in naming both. S. Matthew relates that both were employed. "They brought the ass and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set Him thereon." The untrained colt, an appendage to its mother, was a yet humbler animal. But as the whole action was a picture of our Lord's humility and of the unearthliness of His kingdom, so, doubtless, His riding upon the two animals was a part of that picture. There was no need of two animals to bear our Lord for that short distance. S. John notices especially, <sup>3</sup> These things understood not His disciples at the first. The ass, an unclean stupid debased ignoble drudge, was in itself a picture of unregenerate man, a slave to his passions and to devils, toiling under the load of ever-increasing sin. But, of man, the Jew had been under the yoke and was broken; the Gentiles were the wild unbroken colt. Both were to be brought under obedience to Christ.

10. And I will cut off the chariot. The horse is the symbol of worldly power, as the ass is of meekness. Some, says the Psalmist, <sup>4</sup> put their trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will remember the name of the Lord our God. <sup>5</sup> A horse is but a vain thing to save a man. <sup>6</sup> He delighteth not in the strength of a horse. In scarcely any place in Holy Scripture is the horse spoken of in relation to man, except as the instrument of war. It represents human might, which is either to be consecrated to the Lord, or destroyed by Him<sup>7</sup>. As the <sup>8</sup> stone, cut out without hands, broke in pieces and absorbed into itself all the kingdoms of the world, so here He, Whose Kingdom should not be of this world, should supersede human might. His kingdom was to begin by doing away, among His followers, all, whereby human kingdoms are established. He first cuts off the chariot and the horse, not from His enemies, but from His own people; His people, not as a civil polity, but as the people of God. For the prophet speaks of them as Ephraim and Judah, but Ephraim had no longer a distinct existence.

And He shall speak peace unto the heathen, as the Apostle says, <sup>9</sup> He came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. He shall speak it to them, as He Who hath power to give it to them, peace with God, peace in themselves, the reconciliation of God and man, and the remission of their sins.

<sup>10</sup> At His birth the heavenly host announced peace to men; all His doctrine has peace for its end; when His death was at hand, He especially commended peace to His disciples, that peace which the world knoweth not, which is contained in tranquillity of mind, burning zeal for charity, Divine grace. This same peace He brought to all who gathered themselves to His empire and guidance, that, emerging from intestine wars and foul darkness, they might behold the light of liberty, and, in all wisdom keep the grace of God."

And His dominion shall be from sea to sea. The bounds of the promised land, in its utmost range, on the West, were the Mediterranean sea; on the East, the great river, the Euphrates. The prophet pictures its extension, so as to embrace the whole world, taking away, first the one bound, then the other. From sea to sea is from the Mediterranean to the extremest East, where the Ocean encircles the continent of Asia; from the river to the ends of the earth, is from the Euphrates to the extremest West, embracing the whole of Europe; and whatever may lie beyond, to the ends of the earth, where earth ceaseth to be<sup>11</sup>. It is this same lowly and afflicted king, Whose entry into Jerusalem is on a despised animal. Who shall, by His mere will, make wars to cease, Who shall, by His mere word, give peace to the heathen.

11. As for thee also. The Prophet turns from the deliverance of the whole world to the former people, the sorrows which they should have in the way, and the protection which God would bestow upon them for the sake of Him, Who, according to the flesh, was to be born of them. Thou too; he had spoken of the glories of the Church, such as her king, when He should come, should extend it, embracing earth's remotest bounds; he turns to her, Israel after the flesh, and assures her of the continued protection of God, even in her lowest estate. The deliverance under the Maccabees was, as those under the judges had been, an image of the salvation of Christ and a preparation for it. They were martyrs for the One God and for the faith in the Resurrection, and, whether by doing or by suffering, preserved the sacred line, until Christ should come.

By the blood of thy covenant. <sup>12</sup> Not by the blood of those victims of old, but by the blood of thy covenant, wilt thou be united to the empire of Christ, and so obtain salvation. As the Lord Himself says, This is the blood of covenant, which is shed for you. <sup>13</sup> The gifts and calling of God are without repentance. That symbolic blood, by which, fore-signifying the new Covenant, He made them His own people, <sup>14</sup> Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words, endured still, amid all their unfaithfulness and breaches of it. By virtue of it God would send forth her imprisoned ones out of the deep, dry pit, the dungeon wherein they could be kept securely, because life was not threatened<sup>15</sup>. Out of any depth of hopeless misery, in which they seemed to be shut up, God would deliver them; as David says, <sup>16</sup> He brought me up also out of a horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock and established my goings; and Jeremiah, <sup>17</sup> They have cut off my life in the dungeon, and cast a stone upon me. I called upon Thy Name, O Lord; out of the low dungeon Thou hast heard my voice. "The dry and barren depth of human misery, where are no streams of righteousness, but the mire of iniquity."

12. Turn ye to the stronghold<sup>2</sup>, i. e. Almighty God; as the Psalmists so often say<sup>3</sup>, The Lord is the defence of my life; and Joel<sup>4</sup>, The Lord shall be a stronghold of the children of Israel; and Nahum<sup>5</sup>, The Lord is a stronghold in the day of trouble; And, David said, Thou hast been a shelter for me, a strong tower against the enemy; the Name of the Lord is a strong tower, the righteous runneth into it and is safe; and again, Be Thou to me a rock of strength, a house of defence to save me—Bring me forth out of the net that they have laid privily for me; for Thou art my stronghold. The stronghold, "cut off" from all approach from an enemy, stands in contrast with the deep dungeon of calamity. The return must be a willing return, one in their own power; return to the stronghold, which is Almighty God, must be by conversion of heart and will. Even a Jewish commentator<sup>9</sup> paraphrases, "Turn ye to God; for He is a stronghold and tower of strength."

Ye prisoners of [the] hope<sup>10</sup> not, accordingly, any hope, or generally, hope, but the special hope of Israel, the hope which sustained them in all those years of patient expectation, as S. Paul speaks of<sup>11</sup> the hope of Israel, for which, he says, I am bound with this chain.<sup>12</sup> I stand to be judged for the hope of the promise made by God unto our fathers, unto which promise our twelve tribes, serving God instantly day and night, hope to come; for which hope's sake, King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. And in his Epistles, the hope laid up for you in heaven; the hope of the Gospel; and, looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. He writes also of keeping the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end; of the full assurance of the hope unto the end; of fleeing to lay hold on the hope set before us; which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and stedfast. He does not speak of hope as a grace or theological virtue, but, objectively, as the thing hoped for. So Zechariah calls to them as bound, held fast by the hope, bound, as it were, to it and by it, so as not to let it go, amid the persecution of the world, or weariness of expectation; as S. Paul also says, before faith came, we were guarded, kept in ward, under the law, shut up unto the faith<sup>20</sup> which was about to be revealed.

Even to-day, amid all contrary appearances, do I declare, that I will render double unto thee; as He had said by Isaiah<sup>21</sup>, For your shame ye shall have double.

13. When, or For I have bent<sup>22</sup> Judah for me, as a mighty bow which is only drawn at full human strength, the foot being placed to steady it. It becomes a strong instrument, but only at God's Will. God Himself bends it. It cannot bend itself. And filled the bow with Ephraim<sup>23</sup>. The bow is filled, when the arrow is laid upon it. God would employ both in their different offices, as one. And raised up<sup>24</sup> thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece. Let men place this prophecy where they will, nothing in the history of the world was more contradictory to what was in human sight possible. <sup>25</sup> Greece was, until Alexander, a colonising, not a conquering, nation. The Hebrews had no human knowledge of the site or circumstances of Greece. There was not a little cloud, like a man's hand, when Zechariah thus absolutely foretold the conflict and its issue. Yet here we have a definite prophecy later than Daniel, fitting in with his temporal prophecy, expanding part of it, reaching on beyond the time of Antiochus, and fore-announcing the help of God in two definite ways of protection; 1) without war, against the army of Alexander<sup>26</sup>; 2) in the war of the Maccabees; and these, two of the most critical periods in their history after the captivity<sup>27</sup>. Yet, being expansions of part of the prophecy of Daniel, the period, to which they belong, becomes clearer in the event by aid of the more comprehensive prophecies. They were two points in Daniel's larger prediction of the 3rd empire."

And I will make thee as the sword of a mighty man. The strength is still not their own. In the whole history of Israel, they had only once met in battle an army of one of the world-Empires and defeated it, at a time, when Asa's whole population which could bear arms were 580,000<sup>28</sup>, and he met Zerah the Ethiopian with his million of combatants, besides his 500 chariots, and defeated him. And this, in reliance on the <sup>29</sup> Lord his God, to Whom he cried, Lord, it is nothing to Thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power: help us, O Lord our God; for we rest on Thee, and in Thy Name we go against this multitude. Asa's words found an echo in Judas Maccabæus<sup>30</sup>, when the "small company with him asked him, How shall we be able, being so few, to fight against so great a multitude and so strong?" "It is no hard matter," Judas answered, "for many to be shut up in the hands of a few, and with Heaven it is all one to deliver with a great multitude or a small company. For the victory of battle standeth not in the multitude of an host; but strength cometh from Heaven." But his armies were but a handful; 3000, on three occasions<sup>1</sup>, on one of which they are reduced by fear to 800<sup>2</sup>; 10,000 on two occasions<sup>3</sup>; on another, two armies of 8000 and 3000, with a garrison, not trusted to fight in the open field<sup>4</sup>; on one, 20,000<sup>5</sup>; once only 40,000, which Tryphon treacherously persuaded Jonathan to disperse<sup>6</sup>; these were the numbers with which, always against "great hosts," God gave the victory to the lion-hearted Judas and his brothers. But Who save He, in Whose hands are the hearts of men, could foresee that He, at that critical moment, would raise up that devoted family, or inspire that faith, through which they <sup>7</sup>out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens?

14. And the Lord shall be seen over them<sup>8</sup>, "<sup>9</sup> He will reveal Himself," protecting them. "<sup>10</sup> He says plainly, that the Lord God will be with them and will fight in serried array with them and will with them subdue those who resist them." It is as if he would say, "When they go forth and preach every where, <sup>11</sup>the Lord shall work with them and confirm the word with signs following." And His arrow shall go forth as the lightning. Habakkuk directly calls the lightnings the arrows of God<sup>12</sup>: at the light of Thine arrows they went. Here it is probably of an invisible agency, and so compared to that awful symbol of His presence, the lightning.

And the Lord God shall blow with the trumpet, as their Commander, ordering their goings. The blowing of the trumpet by the priests in war was commanded, as a remembrance of themselves before God, <sup>13</sup>If ye go to war in your land against the enemy that oppresseth you, then ye shall blow an alarm with the trumpets, and ye shall be remembered before the Lord your God, and ye shall be saved from your enemies. Abijah said, <sup>14</sup>God Himself is with us for our captain, and His priests with sounding trumpets to cry alarm against you.

And shall go with whirlwinds of the south, as being the most vehement and destructive. So Isaiah, <sup>15</sup>As whirlwinds in the south sweep by, He cometh from a desert, from a terrible land. Such smote the four corners of the house where Job's children were<sup>16</sup>, and they perished.

15. The Lord of hosts shall defend them. As God says<sup>17</sup>, I will defend this city to save it, for Mine own sake and for My servant David's sake. The word is used by Isaiah only before Zechariah, and of the protection of Almighty God.

The image of the complete protection on all sides stands first in God's words to Abraham<sup>18</sup>, I am thy shield; David thence says to God, <sup>19</sup>Thou, O Lord, art a shield around me.

And they shall devour, and subdue, or more probably<sup>20</sup>, shall tread on, the stones of the sling, as in the image of leviathan in Job, <sup>21</sup>The son of the bow will not make him flee; sling-stones are to him turned into stubble; clubs are counted as stubble; he laugheth at the shaking of a spear. Their enemies shall fall under them, as harmless and as of little account as the sling-stones which have missed their aim, and lie as the road to be passed over. It is not expressed what they shall devour, and so the image is not carried out, but left indefinite, as destruction or absorption only; as in that, <sup>22</sup>thou shalt consume [lit. eat] all the people which the Lord thy God shall deliver thee; and, <sup>23</sup>they are our bread; and in that, <sup>24</sup>they shall devour [lit. eat] all the people round about, where the image is of fire, not of eating. The one thought seems to be, that their enemies should cease to be, so as to molest them any more, whether by ceasing to be their enemies or by ceasing to be. There is no comparison here, (as in Balaam) with the lion; or of eating flesh or drinking blood, which, apart from the image of the wild beast, would be intolerable to Israel, to whom the use of blood, even of animals, was so strictly forbidden. They should disappear, as completely as fuel before the fire, or food before the hungry. The fire was invigorated, not extinguished, by the multitude of the fuel: the multitude of the enemies but nerved and braced those, whom they sought to destroy.

And they shall be filled like bowls, like the corners of the altar. They shall be consecrated instruments of God; they shall not prevail for themselves, but for Him; they shall be hallowed like the bowls of the temple, from which the sacrificial blood is sprinkled on His altar, or as the corners of the altar which receive it.

16. And the Lord their God shall save them in that day. Still all should be God's doing; they themselves were but as a flock, as sheep among wolves, ready for the slaughter; but they were the flock, His people<sup>25</sup>, as He says, <sup>26</sup>I will increase them like the flock, men, as the flock of holy things, as the flock of Jerusalem in her solemn feasts; so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks, men. "<sup>27</sup> As a man saves his flock with all his strength, so He will save His people; for they are His flock." As in, <sup>28</sup>Thou leddest Thy people like sheep by the hand of Moses and Aaron.

They shall be as the stones of a crown. While God's enemies shall be trampled under foot, as a common thing which has failed its end, these shall be precious stones; a consecrated <sup>1</sup> diadem of king or priest, raised aloft<sup>2</sup>, so that all can see. On His land. It was laid down, as the title-deed to its whole tenure, <sup>3</sup> the land is Mine, and much more our Christian land, bought and purified by the blood of Christ.

17. For how great is His goodness. For it is unutterable! As the Psalmist said, <sup>4</sup> O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is Thy Name in all the earth! and Jacob, <sup>5</sup> How awful is this place! and the Psalmist, How awful are Thy doings! The goodness and the beauty are the goodness and beauty of God, Whose great doings had been his theme throughout before. Of the goodness the sacred writers often speak<sup>6</sup>, since of this we have extremest need. And this He shewed to Moses, <sup>7</sup> I will cause all My goodness to pass before thy face. Of this we know somewhat personally in this life; for besides the surpassing amazingness of it in the work of our redemption, we are surrounded by it, immersed in it, as in a fathomless, shoreless ocean of infinite love, which finds entrance into our souls, whenever we bar it not out.

Goodness is that attribute of God, whereby He loveth to communicate to all, who can or will receive it, all good; yea, Himself, <sup>8</sup> Who is the fulness and universality of good, Creator of all good, not in one way, not in one kind of goodness only, but absolutely, without beginning, without limit, without measure, save that whereby without measurement He possesseth and embraceth all excellence, all perfection, all blessedness, all good." This Good His Goodness bestoweth on all and each, according to the capacity of each to receive it, nor is there any limit to His giving, save His creature's capacity of receiving, which also is a good gift from Him. "From Him all things sweet derive their sweetness; all things fair, their beauty; all things bright, their splendour; all things that live, their life; all things sentient, their sense; all that move, their vigour; all intelligences, their knowledge; all things perfect, their perfection; all things in any wise good, their goodness."

The beauty of God belongs rather to the beatific vision. Yet David speaks of the Beauty of Christ<sup>9</sup>, Thou art exceeding fairer than the children of men; and Isaiah says, <sup>10</sup> Thine eyes shall behold the King in His beauty. But the Beauty of God "eye hath not seen nor ear heard nor can heart of man conceive." Here, on earth, created beauty can, at least when suddenly seen, hold the frame motionless, pierce the soul, glue the heart to it, entrance the affections. Light from heaven kindles into beauty our dullest material substances; the soul in grace diffuses beauty over the dullest human countenance; the soul, ere it has passed from the body, has been known to catch, through the half-opened portals, such brilliancy of light, that the eye even for some time after death has retained a brightness, beyond anything of earth<sup>11</sup>. "The earth's form of beauty is a sort of voice of the dumb earth. Doth not, on considering the beauty of this universe, its very

and Holy Scripture tells us that when S. Stephen, full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, was about to speak of Jesus to the council which arraigned him, <sup>15</sup> all that sat in the council, looking steadfastly at him, saw his face as it had been the face of an Angel. It has been said, that if we could see a soul in grace, its beauty would so pierce us, that we should die. But the natural beauty of the soul transcends all corporeal beauty which so attracts us; the natural beauty of the last Angel surpasseth all natural beauty of soul. If we could ascend from the most beautiful form, which the soul could here imagine, to the least glorious body of the beatified, on and on through the countless thousands of glorious bodies, compared wherewith heaven would be dark and the sun lose its shining; and yet more from the most beautiful deified soul, as visible here, to the beauty of the disembodied soul, whose image would scarce be recognized, because <sup>16</sup> the bodily eyes gleamed with angelic radiance; yea, let the God-enlightened soul go on and on, through all those choirs of the heavenly hierarchies, clad with the raiment of Divinity, from choir to choir, from hierarchy to hierarchy, admiring the order and beauty and harmony of the house of God; yea, let it, aided by divine grace and light, ascend even higher, and reach the bound and term of all created beauty, yet it must know that the Divine power and wisdom could create other creatures, far more perfect and beautiful than all which He hath hitherto created. Nay, let the highest of all the Seraphs sum in one all the beauty by nature and grace and glory of all creatures, yet could it not be satisfied with that beauty, but must, because it was not satisfied with it, conceive some higher beauty. Were God forthwith, at every moment to create that higher beauty at its wish, it could still conceive something beyond; for, not being God, its beauty could not satisfy its conception. So let him still, and in hundred thousand, hundred thousand, thousand years with swiftest flight of understanding multiply continually those degrees of beauty, so that each fresh degree should ever double that preceding, and the Divine power should, with like swiftness, concur in creating that beauty, as in the beginning He said, let there be light, and there was light; after all those millions of years, he would be again at the beginning, and there would be no comparison between it and the Divine Beauty of Jesus Christ, God and Man. For it is the bliss of the finite not to reach the Infinite<sup>17</sup>. That city of the blest which is lightened by the glory of God, and the Lamb is the light thereof, sees

CHAPTER X.

1 God is to be sought unto, and not idols. 5 As he visited his flock for sin, so he will save and restore them.

It, enabled by God, as created eye can see It, and is held fast to God in one jubilant ecstasy of everlasting love.

"<sup>1</sup> The Prophet, borne out of himself by consideration of the Divine goodness, stands amazed, while he contemplates the beauty and Deity of Christ: he bursts out with unwonted admiration! How great is His goodness, Who, to guard His flock, shall come down on earth to lay down His life for the salvation of His sheep! How great His beauty, Who is the brightness of the glory and the Image of the Father, and comprises in His Godhead the measure of all order and beauty! With what firm might does He strengthen, with what joy does He overwhelm the souls which gaze most frequently on His beauty, and gives largely and bountifully that corn, by whose strength the youths are made strong. He supplieth abundantly the wine, whereby the virgins, on fire with His love, are exhilarated and beautified. But both are necessary, that the strength of the strong should be upheld by the bread from heaven, and that sound and uncorrupt minds, melted with the sweetness of love, should be re-created with wine, i.e. the sweetness of the Holy Spirit, and be borne aloft with great joy, in the midst of extreme toils. For all who keep holily the faith of Christ, may be called youths, for their unconquered strength, and virgins for their purity and integrity of soul. For all these that heavenly bread is prepared, that their strength be not weakened, and the wine is in poured, that they be not only refreshed, but may live in utmost sweetness."

X. 1. Ask ye of the Lord rain. Ask and ye shall receive, our Lord says. Zechariah had promised in God's name blessings temporal and spiritual: all was ready on God's part; only, he adds, ask them of the Lord, the Unchangeable, the Self-same, not of Teraphim or of diviner, as Israel had done aforetime<sup>2</sup>. He had promised, <sup>3</sup> If ye shall hearken diligently unto My commandments, to love the Lord your God, I will give you the rain of your land in his due season, the first rain and the latter rain, and I will send grass in thy field for thy cattle. God bids them ask Him to fulfil His promise. The latter rain<sup>4</sup> alone is mentioned, as completing what God had begun by the former rain, filling the ears before the harvest. Both<sup>5</sup> had been used as symbols of God's spiritual gifts, and so the words fit in with the close of the last chapter, both as to things temporal and eternal. "<sup>1</sup> He exhorts all frequently to ask for the dew of the divine grace, that what had sprung up in the heart from the seed of the word of God, might attain to full ripeness."

The Lord maketh bright clouds, [rather] lightnings<sup>6</sup>, into rain, as Jeremiah says, <sup>7</sup> He causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth; He maketh lightnings into rain; and the

Psalmist, <sup>8</sup> He maketh lightnings into rain, disappearing as it were into the rain which follows on them. And giveth them. While man is asking, God is answering. Showers of rain<sup>9</sup>, "rain in torrents," as we should say, or "in floods," or, inverted, "floods of rain." To every one grass, rather, the green herb, in the field, as the Psalmist says, <sup>10</sup> He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and green herb for the service of men. This He did with individual care, as each had need, or as should be best for each, as contrariwise He says in Amos, <sup>11</sup> I caused it to rain upon one city, and caused it not to rain upon another city; one piece was rained upon, and the piece, whereon it rained not, withered. The Rabbins observed these exceptions to God's general law, whereby He <sup>12</sup> sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust, though expressing it in their way hyperbolically; "<sup>13</sup> In the time when Israel doeth the will of God, He doeth their will; so that if one man alone, and not the others, wants rain, He will give rain to that one man; and if a man wants one herb alone in his field or garden, and not another, He will give rain to that one herb; as one of the saints used to say, This plot of ground wants rain, and that plot of ground wants not rain<sup>14</sup>." Spiritually the rain is divine doctrine bedewing the mind and making it fruitful, as the rain doth the earth. So Moses saith, <sup>15</sup> My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb and as the showers upon the grass. "<sup>16</sup> The law of Moses and the prophets were the former rain."

2. For the teraphim have spoken vanity, rather, spake vanity. He appeals to their former experience. Their fathers had sought of idols, not of God; therefore they went into captivity. The teraphim were used as instruments of divination. They are united with the ephod, as forbidden, over against the allowed, means of enquiry as to the future, in Hosea, <sup>16</sup> without an ephod and without teraphim; they were united in the mingled worship of Micah<sup>17</sup>; Josiah put them away together with <sup>18</sup> the workers with familiar spirits and the wizards, to which are added, the idols. It was probably, a superstition of Eastern origin. Rachel brought them with her from her father's house, and Nebuchadnezzar used them for divination<sup>19</sup>. Samuel speaks of them, apparently, as things which Saul himself condemned. <sup>20</sup> Rebellion is as the sin of divination, and stubbornness as iniquity or idolatry, and teraphim. For it was probably in those his better days, that <sup>21</sup> Saul had put away those that had familiar spirits and wizards out of the land. Samuel then seems to tell him, that the sins to which he clave were as evil as those which he had, in an outward zeal, like Jehu, condemned. Any how, the teraphim stand united with the divination which was expressly condemned by the law<sup>22</sup>. The use of the teraphim by Rachel<sup>23</sup> and Michal<sup>24</sup>

cir. 487. || fore they went their way as a flock, they || were troubled, <sup>1</sup>because there was no shepherd.

Zechariah uses anew the words of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, <sup>3</sup>Hearken ye not to your prophets, nor to your diviners, nor to your dreamers, nor to your enchanters, nor to your sorcerers; and, <sup>4</sup>let not your prophets and your diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you, neither hearken to your dreams, which ye cause to be dreamed; and Ezekiel, <sup>5</sup>While they see vanity unto thee, while they divine a lie unto thee. The words not only joined on the Prophet's warning with the past, but reminded them of the sentence which followed on their neglect. The echo of the words of the former prophets came to them, floating, as it were, over the ruins of the former temple.

Therefore they went their way as a flock, which, having no shepherd, or only such as would mislead them, removed <sup>6</sup>, but into captivity. They were troubled <sup>7</sup>. The trouble lasted on, though the captivity ended at the appointed time. Nehemiah speaks of the exactions of former governors, <sup>8</sup>The former governors which were before me, laid heavy weights upon the people <sup>9</sup>, and took from them in bread and wine, after forty shekels of silver; also their servants used dominion over <sup>10</sup> the people; and I did not so, because of the fear of God.

Because there was no shepherd. As Ezekiel said of those times, <sup>11</sup>They were scattered, because there is no shepherd; and they became meat to all the beasts of the field, when they were scattered: My flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth; and none did search or seek after them.

3. Mine anger was kindled against the shepherds. As Ezekiel continued, <sup>12</sup>Thus saith the Lord God; Behold I am against the shepherds, and I will require My flock at their hand.

I punished the he-goats. The evil powerful are called the he-goats of the earth <sup>13</sup>; and in Ezekiel God says, <sup>14</sup>I will judge between cattle and cattle, between rams and he-goats; and our Lord speaks of the reprobate as goats, the saved as sheep <sup>15</sup>. God visited upon <sup>16</sup> these in His displeasure, because He visited His flock, the people of Judah, to see to their needs and to relieve them.

And hath made them as the goodly horse, as, before, He said, <sup>17</sup>I made thee as the sword of a mighty man. Judah's might was not in himself; but, in God's hands, he had might like and above the might of this world; he was fearless, resistless; as S. Paul says, <sup>18</sup>the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds.

4. Out of him <sup>19</sup> came forth, or rather, From him is the corner, as Jeremiah <sup>20</sup>, Their nobles shall be from themselves, and their governor shall go forth from the midst of them. Her strength, though given by God, was to be inherent in her, though from her too was to come He Who was to be the head-corner-stone, the sure Foundation and Crown of the whole building.

From thee the nail, an emblem of fixedness in itself, (as Isaiah says, <sup>21</sup>I will fasten him a nail to a sure place) and of security given to others dependent on Him, as Isaiah says further, <sup>22</sup>And they shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house, the offspring and the issue, from the vessels of cups to the vessels of flagons; all, of much or little account, the least and the greatest. <sup>23</sup> Christ is the corner-stone; Christ is the nail fixed in the wall, whereby all vessels are supported. The word of Christ is the bow, whence the arrows rend the king's enemies.

From it every exactor shall go forth together. God had promised <sup>24</sup> that no oppressor, or exactor <sup>25</sup>, shall pass through them any more. He seems to repeat it here. From thee shall go forth every oppressor together; go forth, not to return: as Isaiah had said, <sup>26</sup>Thy children shall make haste to return; thy destroyers and they that made thee waste shall go forth of thee. <sup>27</sup> From it, its corner-stone; from it, the sure nail; from it, the battle bow; from it,—he no longer unites closely with it, that which should be from it, or of it, but—from it shall go forth every oppressor together; one and all, as we say; a confused pêle-mêle body, as Isaiah, <sup>28</sup>all that are found of thee are bound together; together shall they all perish; or, in separate clauses <sup>29</sup>, they are all of them put to shame; together they shall go into confusion.

5. And they [the house of Judah <sup>30</sup>, of whom he had said, He hath made them as the goodly horse in the battle] shall be as mighty men, trampling on the mire of the streets. Micah had said, <sup>31</sup>she shall be a trampling, as the mire of the streets, and David, <sup>32</sup>I did stamp them as the mire of the street. Zechariah, by a yet bolder image, pictures those trampled upon, as what they had become, the mire of the streets, as worthless, as foul; as he had said, <sup>33</sup>they shall trample on the sling-stones.

The captivity is spoken of as past, and the idolatry as before the captivity, which was its punishment. <sup>7</sup> נָסַח occurs in this sense Ps. cxvi. 10, cxix. 67, of man; with נ of wearisome labour Eccl. i. 13, iii. 10, of the lion, Is. xxxi. 4; of the song of the terrible, Ib. xxv. 5 [4 Eng.] all. <sup>8</sup> Neh. v. 15. <sup>9</sup> נָסַח with נָסַח, like "made our, your, yoke heavy," 1 Kgs xii. 10, 14, 2 Chr. x. 10, 14. And they shall fight, because the Lord is with them, not in their own strength, he still reminds them; they shall have power, because God empowers them; strength, because God strengthens them<sup>1</sup>; in presence of which, the goodly war-horse of God, human strength, the riders on horses, shall be ashamed.

6. I will bring them again to place them. Zechariah seems to have condensed into one word two<sup>2</sup> of Jeremiah, I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely. <sup>3</sup> "The two ideas are here both implied, he will cause them to return to their land, and will cause them to dwell there in peace and security."

For I will have mercy upon them. <sup>4</sup> "For the goodness and lovingkindness of God, not any merits of our's, is the first and principal cause of our whole salvation and grace. Therefore the Psalmist says, <sup>5</sup> neither did their own arm save them; but Thy right hand and Thine arm, and the light of Thy countenance, because Thou hadst a favour unto them.

And they shall be, as though I had not cast them off. (etymologically, "loathed," "cast off as a thing abhorrent?") God is ever "the God of the present." He does not half-forgive. <sup>6</sup> Their sins and their iniquities I will remember no more. God casts off the sinner, as being what he is, a thing abhorrent, as penitence confesses of itself that it is <sup>7</sup> "a dead dog, a loathsome worm, a putrid corpse." God will not clothe with a righteousness, which He does not impart. He restores to the penitent all his lost graces, as though he had never forfeited them, and cumulates them with the fresh grace whereby He converts him<sup>10</sup>. It is an entire re-creation. They shall be, as though I had not cast them off. <sup>11</sup> I will settle you as in your old estates, and will do good, more than at your beginnings, and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

For I am the Lord their God, and will hear them, as He says by Malachi<sup>12</sup>, I am the Lord; I change not. His unchangeableness belongs to His Being; I Am; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed; and by Hosea, <sup>13</sup> The Lord of hosts, The Lord is His memorial, therefore turn thou to thy God. Because God was their God, and as surely as He was their God, He would hear them. His Being was the pledge of His hearing. <sup>14</sup> I, the Lord, will hear them; I, the God of Israel, will not forsake them.

7. And Ephraim, they shall be like a mighty man. Prophecy, through the rest of the chapter, turns to Ephraim, which had not yet been restored. With regard to them, human victory retires out of sight, though doubtless, when their wide prison was broken at the destruction of the Persian empire, many were free to return to their native country, as others spread over the West in Asia Minor, Greece, Rome, and so some may have taken part in the victories of the Maccabees. Yet not victory, but strength, gladness beyond natural gladness, as through wine, whereby the mind is exhilarated above itself; and that, lasting, transmitted to their children, large increase, holy life in God, are the outlines of the promise.

Their heart shall rejoice in the Lord, <sup>15</sup> "as the principal object, the first, highest, most worthy Giver of all good, to Whom is to be referred all gladness, which is conceived from created goods, that <sup>16</sup> whoso glorieth may glory in the Lord, in Whom Alone the rational creature ought to take delight."

8. I will hiss for them. Formerly God had so spoken of His summoning the enemies of His people to chastise them. <sup>17</sup> It shall be in that day, that the Lord shall hiss for the fly, that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the bee that is in the land of Assyria, and they shall come, and shall rest all of them in the desolate valleys, and in the holes of the rocks, and upon all thorns and upon all bushes. <sup>18</sup> He will hiss unto them from the ends of the earth, and behold they shall come with speed swiftly; none shall be weary or stumble among them. He would gather them, like the countless numbers of the insect creation, which, if united, would irresistibly desolate life. He would summon them, as the bee-owner, by his shrill call, summons and unites his own swarm. Now, contrariwise God would summon with the same His own people. The fulfilment of the chastisement was the earnest of the ease of the fulfilment of the mercy.

For I have redeemed them. Then they are His, being redeemed at so dear a price. <sup>19</sup> "For Christ, as far as in Him lay, redeemed all." God had done this in purpose, as S. John speaks of <sup>20</sup> the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

And they shall increase as they increased. <sup>21</sup> "As they increased in Egypt, so shall they increase at that time." The marvels of God's favour in Egypt shall be repeated. The increase there had been promised beforehand. <sup>22</sup> Fear not to go down into Egypt; for I will there make of thee a great nation. The fulfilment is recorded, <sup>23</sup> the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them. God appointed that this should be part of their confession at their yearly prosperity, the offering of the basket of first-fruits; <sup>24</sup> A Syrian ready to perish was my father, and he went into Egypt and sojourned there with a few, and became there a nation, great, mighty, and populous. The Psalmist dwelt upon it. <sup>25</sup> He increased His people greatly, and made them stronger than their enemies. It became then one of the resemblances between the first deliverance and the last. <sup>26</sup> "For the Apostles and others converted from Judaism, had more spiritual children, all those whom they begat in Christ, than the synagogue ever had after the flesh."

9. And I will sow them among the nations. Such had been the prophecy of Hosea; <sup>1</sup> I will sow her unto Me in the earth, as the prelude of spiritual mercies, and I will have mercy on her that had not obtained mercy, and I will say to not-my-people, Thou art My people, and they shall say, my God. Hosea's saying, I will sow her in the earth i.e. the whole earth, and that to Me, corresponds to, and explains Zechariah's brief saying, I will sow them among the nations. The sowing, which was future to Hosea, had begun; but the purpose of the sowing, the harvest, was wholly to come; when it should be seen, that they were indeed sown by God, that great should be the day of Jezreel<sup>2</sup>. And Jeremiah said, <sup>3</sup> Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah, with the seed of man and with the seed of beast. The word is used of sowing to multiply, never of mere scattering<sup>4</sup>.

And they shall remember Me in far countries. So Ezekiel had said, <sup>5</sup> And they that escape of you shall remember Me among the nations, whither they shall be carried captive—and they shall loath themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations, and they shall know that I am the Lord.

And shall live. As Ezekiel again says, <sup>6</sup> Ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I open your graves, and bring you up out of your graves, O My people, and shall put My Spirit in you, and ye shall live. With their children. A continuous gift, as Ezekiel, <sup>7</sup> they and their children, and their children's children for ever: and My servant David shall be their prince for ever.

And shall turn again to God, being converted, as Jeremiah had been bidden to exhort them; <sup>8</sup> Go and proclaim these words toward the North, the cities of the Medes whither they were carried captive, and say, Return, thou backsliding Israel, and I will not cause Mine anger to fall upon you; <sup>9</sup> Turn, O backsliding children—and I will take you, one of a city, and two of a family, and will bring you to Zion, and I will give you pastors according to Mine heart. <sup>10</sup> Return, ye backsliding children; I will heal your backslidings. And they answer, Behold, we come unto Thee; for Thou art the Lord our God. So Isaiah had said, <sup>11</sup> A remnant shall return, the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God. <sup>12</sup> They shall return by recollection of mind and adunation and simplification of the affections towards God, so as ultimately to intend that one thing, which alone is necessary."

10. I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt. Individuals had fled to Egypt<sup>13</sup>; but here probably Egypt and Assyria stand, as of old, for the two great conflicting empires, between which Israel lay, at whose hands she had suffered, and who represent the countries which lay beyond them. Hosea unites, <sup>14</sup> the West, Assyria, Egypt, the three then known divisions of the world, Europe, Asia, Africa<sup>15</sup>. Asshur, after Nineveh perished, stands clearly for the world-empire of the East at Babylon<sup>16</sup>, and then in Persia<sup>17</sup>. Balaam includes under Asshur, first Babylon, then the third world-empire<sup>18</sup>. Babylon, which was first subject to Nineveh, then subjected it, was at a later period known to Greek writers (who probably had their information from Persian sources) as part of Assyria<sup>19</sup>.

And I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon, their old dwellings, East and West of Jordan. And place shall not be found for them<sup>20</sup>, as Isaiah says, <sup>21</sup> The children of thy bereaved estate shall yet say in thine ears, The place is too strait for me: give place, that I may dwell.

11. And He, i.e. Almighty God, shall pass through the sea, affliction<sup>22</sup>, as He says, <sup>23</sup> When thou walkest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee. And shall smite the waves in the sea, as in Isaiah, <sup>24</sup> The Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea. The image is from the deliverance of Egypt: yet it is said, that it should not be any exact repetition of the miracles of Egypt; it would be as the Red Sea<sup>25</sup>, which would as effectually shut them in, and in presence of which they might again think themselves lost, through which God would again bring them. But it would not be the Red sea itself; for the sea through which they should be brought, would be affliction; as our own poet speaks of 'taking arms against a sea of troubles.' <sup>26</sup> The promise of succour to those who believe in Christ is under the likeness of the things given to those of old; for as Israel was conveyed across the Red sea, braving the waves in it; <sup>27</sup> for the waters stood upright as an heap, God bringing this to pass marvellously; and as <sup>28</sup> they passed the Jordan on foot, so he says, those who are called through Moses to the knowledge of Christ, and have been saved by the ministries of the holy Apostles, they shall pass the waves of this present life, like an angrily foaming sea, and, being removed from the tumult of this life, shall, undisturbed, worship the true God. And they shall pass through temptations, like sweeping rivers, saying with great joy, in like way, <sup>1</sup>Unless the Lord had been for us, may Israel now say, the waters had drowned us, the stream had gone over our souls." He shall smite the waves in the sea. There, where the strength of the powers of this world is put forth against His people, there He will bring it down. All the deeps of the river, i. e. of the Nile<sup>2</sup>, shall be dried up. The Nile as a mighty river is substituted for the Jordan, symbolising the greater putting forth of God's power in the times to come.

And the pride of Asshur shall be brought down. "3When the good receive their reward, then their enemies shall have no power over them, but shall be punished by Me, because they injured My elect.—By the Assyrians and Egyptians he understands all their enemies."

12. I will strengthen them in the Lord, as our Lord said to S. Paul, My strength is made perfect in weakness, and S. Paul said in turn, When I am weak, then am I strong. And in His Name shall they walk up and down, have their whole conversation "4in Him according to His will, and diligent in all things to speak and act in His grace and Divine hope." "5Christians walk in the Name of Christ, and there is written on the new white stone given to them a new name<sup>6</sup>, and under the dignity of a name so great, they walk with God, as <sup>7</sup>Enoch walked and pleased God and was translated."

Saith the Lord. "4Again the Lord God speaks of the Lord God, as of Another, hinting the plurality of Persons in the Godhead."

XI. "8All the ways of the Lord are mercy and truth, saith the Psalmist<sup>9</sup>, and, <sup>10</sup>I will sing to Thee of mercy and judgement. So is this prophecy divided. Above<sup>11</sup>, almost all were promises of mercy, which are now fulfilled in deed; and from this, <sup>12</sup>Open, O Lebanon, thy doors, all are terrible edicts of truth and tokens of just judgement. How much sweetness and softness and pleasantness is therein, Rejoice greatly, daughter of Zion: shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; what bitterness and acerbity and calamity to those, to whom he says, Open, O Lebanon, thy doors, that the fire may devour thy cedars; howl, O fir tree; howl, O ye oaks of Basan. As then, before, we beheld His mercy in those who believed and believe; so now let us contemplate His just judgement on those who believed not." Gilead and Lebanon<sup>13</sup> had been named as the restored home of Ephraim; but there remained a dark side of the picture, which the prophet suddenly presents, with the names of those self-same lands, <sup>14</sup>Open thy doors, O Lebanon; howl, O ye oaks of Basan."

1. Open thy doors, O Lebanon. Lebanon, whose cedars had stood, its glory, for centuries, yet could offer no resistance to him who felled them and were carried off to adorn the palaces of its conquerors<sup>15</sup>, was in Isaiah<sup>16</sup> and

It has been conjectured that a canal now connecting the Tigris and Euphrates, called Bahr-el-Nil, may have had that name in the time of Daniel and been the river in his vision (Stanley Jewish Church iii. 12). 1) The Bahr-el-Nil is only the modern Arabic name for the Nile. 2) Had the canal been so called in Daniel's time and had he meant it (which is unlikely) he would naturally have called it by its name, not have translated it into the old Egyptian and Hebrew name.

1 The destruction of Jerusalem. The elect being cared for, the rest are rejected. 10 The staves of Beauty and Bands broken by the rejection of Christ. 15 The type and curse of a foolish shepherd.

Jeremiah<sup>17</sup> the emblem of the glory of the Jewish state; and in Ezekiel, of Jerusalem, as the prophet himself explains it<sup>18</sup>; glorious, beauteous, inaccessible, so long as it was defended by God; a ready prey, when abandoned by Him. The centre and source of her strength was the worship of God; and so Lebanon has of old been understood to be the temple, which was built with cedars of Lebanon, towering aloft upon a strong summit; the spiritual glory and the eminence of Jerusalem, as Lebanon was of the whole country, and "19to strangers who came to it, it appeared from afar like a mountain full of snow; for, where it was not gilded, it was exceeding white, being built of marble." But at the time of destruction, it was <sup>20</sup>a den of thieves, as Lebanon, amidst its beauty, was of wild beasts.

"8I suppose Lebanon itself, i. e. the temple, felt the command of the prophet's words, since, as its destruction approached, its doors opened without the hand of man. Josephus relates how "21at the passover, the Eastern gate of the inner temple, being of brass and very firm, and with difficulty shut at eventide by twenty men; moreover with bars strengthened with iron, and having very deep bolts, which went down into the threshold, itself of one stone, was seen at six o'clock at night to open of its own accord. The guards of the temple running told it to the officer, and he, going up, with difficulty closed it. This the uninstructed thought a very favourable sign, that God opened to them the gate of all goods. But those taught in the Divine words, understood that the safety of the temple was removed of itself, and that the gate opened." A saying of this sort is still exstant. "22Our fathers have handed down, forty years before the destruction of the house, the lot of the Lord did not come up on the right hand, and the tongue of splendour did not become white, nor did the light from the evening burn, and the doors of the temple opened of their own accord, until Rabban Johanan ben Zaccai rebuked them, and said, 'O temple, why dost thou affright thyself? I know of thee that thy end is to be destroyed, and of this Zechariah prophesied, Open thy doors, O Lebanon, and let the fire devour thy cedars.'" The "forty years" mentioned in this tradition carry back the event exactly to the Death of Christ, the temple having been burned A.D. 73<sup>23</sup>. Josephus adds that they opened at the passover, the season of His Crucifixion. On the other hand, the shutting of the gates of the temple, when they had <sup>24</sup>seized Paul and dragged him out of the temple, seems miraculous and significant, that, having thus violently refused the preaching of the Gospel, and cast Paul out, they themselves were also shut out, denoting that an entrance was afterwards to be refused them.

And let a fire devour thy cedars. Jerusalem, or the temple, were, after those times, burned by the Romans only. The destruction of pride, opposed to Christ, was prophesied by Isaiah in connection with His Coming<sup>1</sup>.

2. Howl, O cypress, for the cedar is fallen. Jerusalem or the temple having been likened to Lebanon and its cedars, the prophet carries on the image, speaking of the priests princes and people, under the title of firs cypresses and oaks, trees inferior, but magnificent. He shews that it is imagery, by ascribing to them the feelings of men. The more glorious and stately, the cedars, were destroyed. Woe then to the rest, the cypress; as our Lord says, <sup>2</sup> If they do these things in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry? and S. Peter, <sup>3</sup> If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

For the defenced<sup>4</sup> forest is come down; that which was closed and inaccessible to the enemy. All which was high and lifted up was brought low, came down, even to the ground<sup>5</sup>.

3. A voice of the howling of the shepherds, for their glory is spoiled. It echoes on from Jeremiah before the captivity, <sup>6</sup> Howl, ye shepherds—A voice of the cry of the shepherds, and an howling of the principal of the flock; for the Lord hath spoiled their pasture. There is one chorus of desolation, the mighty and the lowly; the shepherds and the young lions; what is at other times opposed is joined in one wailing. The pride of Jordan are the stately oaks on its banks, which shroud it from sight, until you reach its edges, and which, after the captivity of the ten tribes, became the haunt of lions and their chief abode in Palestine, “on account of the burning heat, and the nearness of the desert, and the breadth of the vast solitude and jungles<sup>7</sup>.”

4. Thus saith the Lord my God, Feed the flock of the slaughter. The fulfilment of the whole prophecy shews, that the person addressed is the prophet, not in, or for himself, but (as belongs to symbolic prophecy) as representing Another, our Lord. It is addressed, in the first instance, to Zechariah. For Zechariah is bidden, <sup>8</sup> take unto thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd, in words addressed to himself, personally; And the Lord said unto me. But he who was to represent the foolish shepherd, had represented the True Shepherd, since it is said to him, “Take unto thee yet.” But He, the Shepherd addressed, who does the acts commanded, speaks with the authority of God. He says, <sup>9</sup> I cut off three shepherds in one month; <sup>10</sup> I broke My covenant which I had made with all the peoples; <sup>11</sup> the poor of the flock waited upon Me; <sup>12</sup> I cut asunder Mine other staff, Bands, that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel. But in Zechariah’s time, no three shepherds were cut off, the covenant made by God was not broken on His part, there was no

Feed the flock of the slaughter<sup>13</sup>, those who were, even before the end, slain by their evil shepherds whom they followed, and who in the end would be given to the slaughter, as the Psalmist says, <sup>14</sup> we are counted as sheep for the slaughter, because they would not hear the voice of the True Shepherd, and were not His sheep. They were already, by God’s judgement, a prey to evil shepherds; and would be so yet more hereafter. As a whole then, they were sheep of the slaughter. It is a last charge given to feed them. As our Lord says, <sup>15</sup> Last of all, He sent unto them His Son, saying, They will reverence My Son. This failing, nothing remained but that the flock would be given up, as they themselves say, <sup>16</sup> He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out His vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render Him the fruits in their seasons, i. e. our Lord explains it, <sup>17</sup> The kingdom of heaven shall be taken from them, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. Yet a remnant should be saved, for whose sake the larger flock was still to be fed: and, as our Lord, as Man, wept over Jerusalem, whose sentence He pronounced, so He still feeds those who would not turn to Him that they might be saved, and who would in the end be a flock of slaughter, <sup>18</sup> Death their shepherd, since they chose death rather than Life.

And they that sell them say, Blessed be the Lord, for I am rich. Even Sennacherib felt himself in part, or thought best to own himself, to be an instrument in God’s hand<sup>27</sup>. But Titus when he <sup>28</sup> entered Jerusalem, marvelled at the strength of the city and its towers, which ‘the tyrants’ in phrenzy abandoned. When then he had beheld their solid strength and the greatness of each rock, and how accurately they were fitted in, and how great their length and breadth, he said 'By the help of God we have warred: and God it was Who brought down the Jews from those bulwarks: for what avail the hands of man or his engines against such towers?' Much of this sort he said to his friends." The Jews also were sold in this war, as they had not been in former captures; and that, not by chance, but because the Roman policy was different from all, known by "experience" in the time of Zechariah. Into Babylon they had been carried captive, as a whole, because it was the will of God, after the seventy years to restore them. In this war, it was His will to destroy or disperse them; and so those above 17 were sent to Egypt to the works; those below 17 were sold. "The whole number taken prisoners during the wars were 1100,000," besides those who perished elsewhere. "Read we the ancient histories and the traditions of the mourning Jews, that at the Tabernaculum Abrahæ (where now is a very thronged mart every year) after the last destruction, which they endured from Adrian, many thousands were sold, and what could not be sold were removed into Egypt, and destroyed by shipwreck or famine and slaughter by the people. No displeasure came upon the Romans for the utter destruction, as there had upon the Assyrians and Chaldeans."

And their own shepherds (in contrast to those who bought and sold them, who accordingly were not their own, temporal or spiritual) they to whom God had assigned them, who should have fed them with the word of God, strengthened the diseased, healed the sick, bound up the broken, and sought the lost, pity them not. He says what they should have done, in blaming them for what they did not do. They owed them a tender compassionate love<sup>4</sup>; they laid aside all mercy, and became wolves, as S. Paul says; After my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. They who owed them all love, shall have none. "No marvel then, he says, if enemies shall use the right of conquest, when their very shepherds and teachers spared them not, and, through their fault, the flock was given over to the wolves." All were corrupted, High Priest, priests, scribes, lawyers, Pharisees, Sadducees. No one<sup>6</sup> had pity on them.

6. For I will no more pity. Therefore were they a flock of the slaughter, because God would have no pity on those who went after shepherds who had no pity upon them, but corrupted them; who entered not in themselves, and those who were entering in, they hindered.

The inhabitants of the land, "that land, of which he had been speaking," Judæa. And lo. God, by this word, lo, always commands heed to His great doings with man; I, I, Myself<sup>8</sup>, visibly interposing, will deliver man, the whole race of inhabitants, every one into his neighbour's hand, by confusion and strife and hatred within, and into the hand of his king, him whom they chose and took as their own king, when they rejected Christ as their King, repudiating the title which Pilate gave Him, to move their pity. Whereas He, their Lord and God, was their King, they formally denied Him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let Him go; they denied the Holy One and the Just, and said, <sup>10</sup> We have no king but Cæsar.

And they, the king without and the wild savages within, shall smite, bruise, crush in pieces, like a broken vessel<sup>11</sup>, the land, and out of their hand I will not deliver them. Their captivity shall be without remedy or end. Holy Scripture often says, there is no deliverer<sup>12</sup>, or <sup>13</sup> none can deliver out of My hand, or, since God delighteth in doing good, <sup>14</sup> He<sup>15</sup>, will deliver, or delivered<sup>16</sup> from the hands of the enemy, or their slavery, or their own fears, or afflictions, or the like. God no where else says absolutely as here, I will not deliver<sup>17</sup>. "Hear, O Jew," says S. Jerome, "who holdest out to thyself hopes most vain, and hearest not the Lord strongly asserting, I will not deliver them out of their hands, that thy captivity among the Romans shall have no end." In the threatened captivity before they were carried to Babylon, the prophet foretold the restoration: here only it is said of Judah, as Hosea had said of Israel, that there should be no deliverer out of the hand of the king whom they had chosen.

7. The prophetic narrative which follows, differs in its form, in some respects, from the symbolical actions of the prophets and from Zechariah's own visions. The symbolical actions of the prophets are actions of their own: this involves acts, which it would be impossible to represent, except as a sort of drama. Such are the very central points, the feeding of the flock, which yet are intelligent men who understand God's doings: the cutting off of the three shepherds; the asking for the price; the unworthy price offered; the casting it aside. It differs from Zechariah's own visions, in that they are for the most part exhibited to the eye, and Zechariah's own part is simply to enquire their meaning and to learn it, and to receive further revelation. In one case only, he himself interposes in the action of the vision<sup>18</sup>; but this too, as asking that it might be done, not, as himself doing it. Here, he is himself the actor, yet as representing Another, Who alone could cut off shepherds, abandon the people to mutual destruction, annulling the covenant which He had made. Maimonides, then, seems to say rightly; "<sup>19</sup> This, I fed the flock of the slaughter, to the end of the narrative, where he is said to have asked for his hire, to have received it, and to have cast it into the temple, to the treasurer, all this Zechariah saw in prophetic vision. For the command which he received, and the act which he is said to have done, took place in prophetic vision or dream. "This," he adds, "is beyond controversy, as all know, who are able to distinguish the possible from the impossible."

"<sup>1</sup> The actions, presented to the prophets are not always to be understood as actions but as predictions. As when God commands Isaiah, to make the heart of the people dull <sup>2</sup> i.e. to denounce to the people their future blindness, through which they would, with obstinate mind, reject the mercies of Christ. Or when He says, that He appointed Jeremiah <sup>3</sup> to destroy and to build; to root out and to plant. Or when He commanded the same prophet to cause the nations to drink the cup, whereby they should be bereft of their senses <sup>4</sup>, Jeremiah did nothing of all this, but asserted that it would be. So here."

And I will feed the flock of the slaughter, rather And [our, so] I fed <sup>5</sup>. The prophet declares, in the name of our Lord, that He did what the Father commanded Him. He fed the flock, committed to His care by the Father, who, through their own obstinacy, became the flock of slaughter. What could be done, He did for them; so that all might see that they perished by their own fault. The symbol of our Lord, as the Good Shepherd, had been made prominent by Isaiah Jeremiah and Ezekiel, <sup>6</sup> Behold the Lord will come, as a Mighty One—He shall feed His flock like a shepherd: He shall gather the lambs with His arm and carry them in His bosom: He shall gently lead those that are with young. And Jeremiah, having declared God's judgements on the then shepherds <sup>7</sup>, <sup>8</sup> I will gather the remnant of My flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their fold; and they shall be fruitful and increase. And I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them. Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a king shall reign and prosper—and this is the name whereby He shall be called, the Lord our Righteousness. And Ezekiel with the like context <sup>9</sup>; <sup>10</sup> Therefore will I save My flock and they shall be no more a prey; and I will judge between cattle and cattle. And I will set One Shepherd over them, and He shall feed them: My servant David, He shall feed them; and He shall be their Shepherd; and, uniting both offices, <sup>11</sup> David, My servant, shall be king over them, and they shall all have One Shepherd. It was apparent then beforehand, Who this Shepherd was to be, to Whom God gave the feeding of the flock.

"Even you, or for you, ye poor of the flock; or, therefore, being thus commanded, [fed I] the poor of the flock <sup>12</sup>. The whole flock was committed to Him to feed. He had to seek out all <sup>13</sup> the lost sheep of the house of Israel. "<sup>14</sup> He fed, for the time, the Jews destined to death, until their time should come;" the fruit of His labour was in the <sup>15</sup> little flock, "the faithful Jews who believed in Him, out of the people of the flock aforesaid, or the synagogue, Who in the primitive Church despised all earthly things, leading a most pure life." So He says, <sup>16</sup> I will feed My flock and I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord God: I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick: but I will destroy the fat and the strong, I will feed them with judgement.

The elect are the end of all God's dispensations. He fed all; yet the fruit of His feeding, His toils, His death, the travail of His soul, was in those only who are saved. So S. Paul says, <sup>17</sup> Therefore I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory. He fed all; but the poor of the flock alone, those who were despised of men, because they would not follow the pride of the High Priests and Scribes and Pharisees, believed on Him, as they themselves say, <sup>18</sup> Have any of the rulers or the Pharisees believed on Him? and S. Paul says, <sup>19</sup> Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and base things of the world, and things despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are.

And I took unto Me two [shepherd's] staves, as David says, <sup>20</sup> Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me. The one I called Beauty or Loveliness <sup>21</sup>, as the Psalmist longs to behold the beauty or loveliness of God in His temple <sup>22</sup>, and says; let <sup>23</sup> the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us.

And the other I called Bands, lit. Binders <sup>24</sup>. The one staff represents the full favour and loving-kindness of God; when this was broken, there yet remained the other, by which they were held together as a people in covenant with God. And I fed the flock. This was the use of his staves; He tended them with both, ever putting in exercise towards them the loving beauty and grace of God, and binding them together and with Himself.

8. And I cut off three shepherds in one month. "<sup>25</sup> I have read in some one's commentary, that the shepherds, cut off in the indignation of the Lord, are to be understood of priests and false prophets and kings of the Jews, who, after the Passion of Christ, were all cut off in one time, of whom Jeremiah speaketh, <sup>26</sup> The priests said not, Where is the Lord? and they that handle the law knew Me not; the pastors also transgressed against Me, and the prophets prophesied by Baal, and walked after things which do not profit," and again, <sup>27</sup> As the thief is ashamed when he is found, so is the house of Israel ashamed; they, their kings, their princes, and their priests and their prophets; and <sup>28</sup> they said, Come, let us devise devices against Jeremiah; for the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the prophet. <sup>1</sup>He speaks of the kings of the Jews, and prophets and priests; for by the three orders they were shepherded. <sup>2</sup>The true and good Shepherd having been already pointed out, it was right and necessary that the hirelings and false shepherds should be removed, the guides of the Jews in the law. The three shepherds were, I deem, those who exercised the legal priesthood, and those appointed judges of the people, and the interpreters of Scripture, i.e. the lawyers. For these too fed Israel. Those who had the glory of the priesthood were of the tribe of Levi only; and of them Malachi says, <sup>3</sup>The priest's lips shall keep knowledge, and they shall seek the law at his mouth. But those who received authority to judge were also selected, yet were appointed out of every tribe. In like way the lawyers, who were ever assessors to the judges, and adduced the words of the law in proof of every matter.—But we shall find that our Lord Jesus Christ Himself expressly pronounced woe on the Pharisees and scribes and lawyers. For He said, <sup>4</sup>Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees. And when one of the lawyers hereupon answered Him saying, <sup>5</sup>Master, so saying Thou reproachest us also, He said, Woe unto you also, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers. These three Shepherds then, priests and judges and lawyers <sup>6</sup>, who remained in their own orders and places, until the coming of Christ, were very justly taken away in one month. For since <sup>7</sup>they killed the Prince of life, thereby also are they mown down, and that in the month of the first fruits, in which Emmanuel endured to be slain for us. They remained indeed administering Israel, even after the Saviour's Cross, through the long-suffering and compassion of Almighty God calling them to repentance; but, in the sentence passed by God, they were taken away, at that time, when they delivered to the Cross the Saviour and Redeemer of all. They were taken away then in one month; Nisan. A. D. 33. The three offices, King, Divine Teacher, Priest, were to be united in Christ: they might have been held under Him: those who rejected them in Him, forfeited them themselves. These then He made to disappear, effaced them from the earth <sup>8</sup>.

And My soul was straitened for them <sup>9</sup>. It is used of the Divine grief at the misery of His people <sup>10</sup>. And their soul abhorred Me, nauseated Me <sup>11</sup>. <sup>12</sup>When it is said, Their soul also abhorreth Me, the meaning is, 'My soul did not loathe them first, but their soul first despised Me, therefore My Soul abhorred them.' The soul which drives away God's good <sup>6</sup> No other explanation of the 'three shepherds' seems to me at all to recommend itself. The Jews made them Moses Aaron and Miriam (Ta'anith f. 9a.) and, from them, S. Jerome; J. Kim. and (as one solution) Ibn Ezra, suggested Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi: "After whom," the rabbis say, "prophecy departed from Israel" ("on account of the cutting off of prophecy at their death," opinion in Tanchum.) Abraham Lev. "the principality of the sons of David, and the monarchy of the Hasmonians, and that of their servants." D. Kim., "the three sons of Josiah, Jehoahaz, Jehoiahi and Zedekiah." Abarbanel, "the Maccabees, Judas Jonathan and Simon." Raah, "the house of Ahab and the house of Ahaziah, and his brethren and all the posterity of the kingdom of David (except Josiah) slain by Ahab and Athaliah." Tanchum, "Joshua the high-priest and the second priest and the anointed for war;" (Buxtorf refers for his office to Maimonides, Hilchos melachin umilchama c. 7. and Massecheth Sota c. 8. Lex. Chald. col. 1267). "And it is said, Joshua, Zerrubabel and Nehemiah," Tanchum. Theodorus of Mops. interpreted it of 'the priests' generally, not of any three classes of persons. Three classes, Priests, Pharisees and Sadducees, were adopted by

Spirit, comes at last to loathe Him and the thought and mention of Him.

9. And I said, I will not feed you. God, at last, leaves the rebellious soul or people to itself, as He says by Moses, <sup>13</sup>Then My anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and will hide My Face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall find them: and our Lord tells the captious Jews; <sup>14</sup>I go My way, and ye shall seek Me and shall die in your sins.

That which dieth, let it die. Zechariah seems to condense, but to repeat the abandonment in Jeremiah; <sup>15</sup>Cast them out of My sight, and let them go forth. And it shall be, if they shall say unto thee, Whither shall we go forth? then thou shalt tell them, Thus saith the Lord, Such as are for death, to death; and such as are for the sword, to the sword; and such as are for the captivity, to the captivity. First, God gives over to death without violence, by famine or pestilence, those whose lot it should be; another portion to violent death by the sword; that which is cut off shall be cut off; and the rest, the flock of slaughter, would be turned into wolves; and, as in the awful and horrible siege of Jerusalem, those who had escaped these deaths, the left-over, shall eat every one of the flesh of his neighbour, every law of humanity and of nature broken. <sup>16</sup>So should they understand at last, how evil and bitter a thing it is for all who lived by My help to be despoiled of that help.

10. And I took my staff Beauty, and cut it asunder. Not, as aforetime, did He chasten His people, retaining His relation to them: for such chastening is an austere form of love. By breaking the staff of His tender love, He signified that this relation was at an end.

That I might dissolve My covenant which I had made with all the people, rather, with all the peoples, i. e. with all nations. Often as it is said of Israel, that they brake the covenant of God <sup>17</sup>, it is spoken of God, only to deny that He would break it <sup>18</sup>, or in prayer that He would not <sup>19</sup>. Here it is not absolutely the covenant with His whole people, which He brake; it is rather, so to speak, a covenant with the nations in favour of Israel, allowing thus much and forbidding more, with regard to His people. So God had said of the times of Christ <sup>20</sup>; In that day I will make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field and with the fowls of the heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground; and, <sup>21</sup>I will make with them a covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land; and in Job <sup>22</sup>thou shalt be in league with the stones of the

11 And it was broken in that day: and so <sup>k</sup> the poor of the flock that waited upon me knew that it was the word of the Lord.

12 And I said unto them, † If ye think field, and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee. This covenant He willed to annihilate. He would no more interpose, as He had before said, <sup>1</sup> I will not deliver from their hand. Whoever would might do, what they would, as the Romans first, and well nigh all nations since, have inflicted on the Jews, what they willed; and Mohammedans too have requited to them their contumely to Jesus.

11. And so the poor of the flock that waited upon Me <sup>2</sup> knew. The rest were blinded; those who listened to God's word, observed His Prophet, waited on Him and observed His words, knew from the fulfilment of the beginning, that the whole was God's word. Every darkening cloud around the devoted city was an earnest, that the storm, which should destroy it, was gathering upon it. So our Lord warned, <sup>3</sup> When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judaea flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart. The little flock which waited upon the Good Shepherd, obeyed the warning, and, fleeing to Pella, escaped the horrible judgement which fell on those who remained. "They remembered that it had been predicted many centuries before, and that the Lord, by Whose Spirit the prophet spake, foretold that in that city <sup>5</sup> one stone should not be left upon another."

12. And I said unto them, If ye think good, give Me My price. God asks of us a return, not having any proportion to His gifts of nature or of grace, but such as we can render. He took the Jews out of the whole human race, made them His own, a peculiar people, freed them from the bondage and the iron furnace of Egypt, gave them the land flowing with milk and honey, fed and guarded them by His Providence, taught them by His Prophets. He, the Lord and Creator of all, was willing to have them alone for His inheritance, and, in return, asked them to love Him with their whole heart, and to do what He commanded them. <sup>6</sup> He sent His servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of the vineyard; and the husbandmen took His servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another. Last of all, He sent unto them His Son, to ask for those fruits, the return for all His bounteous care and His unwearied acts of power and love. "Give Me," He would say, "some fruits of piety, and tokens of faith."

"What? Does He speak of a price? Did the Lord of all let out His toil? Did He bargain with those, for whom He expended it for a certain price? He did. He condescended to serve day and night for our salvation and dignity; and as one hired, in view of the reward which He set before Him, to give all His care to adorn and sustain our condition. So He complains by Isaiah, that He had undergone great toil to do away our sins. But what reward did He require? Faith and the will of a faithful heart, that thereby we might attain the gift of righteousness, and might in holy works pant after everlasting glory. For He needeth not our goods; but He so bestoweth on us all things, as to esteem His labour amply paid, if He see us enjoy His gifts. But He so asketh for this as a reward, as to leave us free, either by faith and the love due, to embrace His benefits, or faithlessly to reject it. This is His meaning, when He saith,

And if not, forbear. God does not force our free-will, or constrain our service. He places life and death before us, and bids us choose life. By His grace alone we can choose Him; but we can refuse His grace and Himself. <sup>8</sup> Thou shalt say unto them, He says to Ezekiel, Thus saith the Lord God, He that heareth, let him hear, and he that forbeareth, let him forbear. This was said to them, as a people, the last offer of grace. It gathered into one all the past. As Elijah had said, <sup>9</sup> If the Lord be God, follow Him; but if Baal, then follow him; so He bids them, at last to choose openly, whose they would be, to whom they would give their service; and if they would refuse in heart, to refuse in act also. Forbear, cease, leave off, abandon; and that for ever.

So they weighed for My price thirty pieces of silver; the price of a slave, gored to death by an ox <sup>10</sup>. Whence one of themselves says, <sup>11</sup> you will find that a freeman is valued, more or less, at 60 shekels, but a slave at thirty. He then, Whom the prophet represented, was to be valued at thirty pieces of silver. It was but an increase of the contumely, that this contemptuous price was given, not to Him, but for Him, the Price of His Blood. It was matter of bargain. <sup>12</sup> Judas said, What will ye give me, and I will deliver Him unto you? The High Priest, knowingly or unknowingly, fixed on the price, named by Zechariah. As they took into their mouths willingly the blasphemy mentioned in the Psalm; <sup>13</sup> they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying, He trusted in the Lord, that He would deliver Him; let Him deliver Him, seeing that He delighted in Him; so perhaps they fixed on the thirty pieces of silver, because Zechariah had named them as a sum offered in contumely to him, who offered to be a shepherd and asked for his reward.

13. *And the Lord said unto me, Cast it, as a thing vile and rejected, as torn flesh was to be cast to dogs <sup>14</sup>, or a corpse was cast unburied <sup>15</sup>, or the dead body of Absalom was cast into the pit <sup>16</sup>, or the dust of the idol-altars into the brook Kedron by Josiah <sup>17</sup>, or the idols to the moles and the bats <sup>18</sup>; or Judah and Israel from the face of God <sup>19</sup> into a strange land <sup>20</sup>, Coniah and his seed, a vessel in which is no pleasure <sup>21</sup>, into a land which they knew not; or the rebels against God, said, <sup>22</sup> let us cast away their cords from us; or wickedness was cast into the Ephah <sup>23</sup>; once it is added <sup>24</sup>, *for loathing.

Unto the potter. The words exactly correspond with the event, that the thirty pieces of silver were cast or flung away <sup>25</sup>; that their ultimate destination was the potter, whose field was bought with them; but that they were not cast directly to him, (which were a contemptuous act, such as would

A goodly price, that I was priced at of them, lit. the magnificence of the value<sup>3</sup>, at which I was valued of them! The strong irony is carried on by the, at which I was valued of them, as in the idiom, thou wert precious in my sight<sup>4</sup>. Precious the thought of God to David<sup>5</sup>; precious the redemption of the soul of man<sup>6</sup>; and precious was the Shepherd Who came to them; precious was the value, whereat He was valued by them<sup>7</sup>. And yet He, Who was so valued, was Almighty God. For so it stands: Thus saith the Lord God, Cast it unto the potter, the goodly price that I was priced at of them. The name, the potter, connects the prophecy with that former prophecy of Jeremiah<sup>8</sup>, denouncing the judgement of God for the shedding of innocent blood, whereby they had defiled the valley of the son of Hinnom, which was at the entry of the gate of the pottery<sup>9</sup>, and which, through the vengeance of God there, should be called the valley of slaughter<sup>10</sup>. The price of this innocent Blood, by the shedding of which the iniquities of their fathers were filled up, should rest on that same place, for whose sake God said, <sup>11</sup>I will break this people and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be made whole again. So then S. Matthew may have quoted this prophecy as Jeremiah's, to signify how the woes, denounced on the sins committed in this same place, should be brought upon it through this last crowning sin, and all the righteous blood which had been shed, should come upon that generation<sup>12</sup>.

Other cases are simple omissions of the א, not an interchange at all; as מפ for מפ (med. i. Arab. Atth.), Jer. xxv. 27, מפ for מפ, Is. xxxiv. 20, מפ Jer. vi. 7, a mere correction of מפ and מפ (see below). Biblical Hebrew מפ (1 Sam. xxiii. 18, 22 Ch.) is a mere corruption of מפ, as all languages' proper names are the most easily corrupted. (See Daniel the prophet p. 405 ed. 2.) מפ (2 Sam. x. ch. 5. Mic. vi. 19) and the common מפ, each lose one letter of the original form, which has both. (See on Daniel the prophet p. 60 note. ed. 2) There is not then the slightest countenance for assuming that מפ is not, what according to its form, it is, "the potter." <sup>2</sup> Osor.

12 S. Augustine suggests that St. Matthew wished to lead the reader to connect the prophecy of Zechariah with Jerem. xxxix. 9. "All copies," he says, "have not 'Jeremiah' but only 'by the prophet'; but more Mas. have the name of Jeremiah; and those who have considered the Gospel carefully in the Greek copies, say that they have found it in the older Greek (copies); and there is no reason why the name should be added, so as to occasion a fault; but there was a reason why it should be removed from some copies, this being done by a bold unskillfulness [imperiality] being distracted by the question, that this testimony was not found in Jeremiah." "S. Matthew," he says further, "would have corrected it in his life-time at least, when admonished by others who could read this, while he was yet in the flesh, unless he thought that one name of a prophet instead of another did, not without reason, occur to his memory, which was ruled by the Holy Spirit, but that the Lord appointed that it should be so written," 1) to shew that all the prophets, speaking by the Spirit, agreed together by a marvellous consent, which is much more than if all the things of the prophets were spoken by the mouth of one man, and so that, whatever the Holy Spirit said by them, should be received undoubtedly, and each belonged to all and all to each &c. 2) to combine it with the selling the field of Hananeel, of which the evidence was put in an earthen vessel; de Cons. <sup>a</sup> Ezek. 34, 2,

14 Then I cut asunder mine other staff, even || Bands, that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel.

15 ¶ And the Lord said unto me, <sup>a</sup> Take

14. And I cut asunder mine other staff, Bands, to dissolve the brotherhood between Judah and Israel. Hitherto prophecy had spoken of the healing of the great breach between Israel and Judah, in Christ. The Lord, Isaiah said, <sup>1</sup> shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. The envy of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim; and Hosca, <sup>2</sup> Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together and shall appoint themselves one Head; and Jeremiah, <sup>3</sup> In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel. And Ezekiel, in the midst of the captivity, in a symbolic action the counterpart of this, is bidden, <sup>4</sup> Take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions; then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim and all the house of Israel his companions, and join them one to another into one stick, and they shall become one in thy hand; and, when asked the meaning of this act, he was to say, Thus saith the Lord God, <sup>5</sup> I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and will make them one stick, and they shall be one in Mine hand. And dropping the symbol; <sup>6</sup> Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone—and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel: and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all—I will cleanse them, and they shall be My people and I will be their God, and David My servant shall be king over them, and they all shall have one Shepherd. Such should be the unity of those who would be gathered under the One Shepherd. And so it was. <sup>7</sup> The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; and long afterwards it was a proverb among the Heathen <sup>8</sup>, “See how these Christians love one another.” Zechariah is here speaking of those who had rejected the Good Shepherd, the Israel and Judah after the flesh, who shut themselves out from the promises of God. This had its first fulfilment in the terrible dissolution of every band of brotherhood <sup>9</sup> and of our common nature, which made the siege of Jerusalem a proverb for horror, and precipitated its destruction. <sup>10</sup> Having thus separated the believing from the unbelieving, He bared the rest of His care. And what we now see bears witness to the prophecy. For the Jews, being deprived of prophets and priests and kings and temple and ark and altar and mercy-seat and candlestick and table and the rest, through which the legal worship was performed, have come to be deprived also of the guardianship from above; and, scattered, exiled, removed, serve against their will those who preach Christ: denying Him as Lord, they yield service to His servants. The prophet having foretold these things of Christ, our God and Saviour, and reproved the obstinacy of the Jews, naturally turns his prophecy straight to the God-opposed christ whom they expect, as they say. So said the Lord in the holy Gospels to them, <sup>11</sup> I am come in My Father's name, and ye receive Me not; another will come in his own name, and him ye will receive. This the blessed Paul also prophesied of them, <sup>12</sup> Because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved, God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie, that all might be damned, who believe not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness. The like does the blessed Zechariah prophecy, having received the power of the Holy Spirit.

“<sup>15</sup> Yet. He had enacted one tragedy, in which he clearly set forth the future guilt of Judas; now another is set forth, the accumulated scoffing through Anti-Christ. For as Paul said, because they receive not the Spirit of truth, the All-righteous Judge shall send them a spirit of delusion, that they should believe a lie<sup>16</sup>. He calls him a foolish shepherd, for since the extremest folly consists in the extremest wickedness, he will be the most foolish, who reached the highest impiety, and this he will do by arrogating to himself divinity and claiming divine honours<sup>17</sup>.

This is the only action, which the prophet had to enact or to relate. If it was a visible act, the instrument might be a staff which should bruise, an instrument which should bear a semblance to that of the good shepherd, but which should be pernicious. “<sup>18</sup> Good shepherds, who understood their business, had slight staves, that, if there should be occasion to strike, the stricken sheep might not be bruised; but one who understandeth not, beats them with thicker clubs.” Or it may mean also, whatever he would use for the hurtful treatment of the sheep, such as he proceeds to speak of. He is spoken of as, in fact, foolishly sinful<sup>14</sup>: for sin is the only real folly, and all real folly has sin mingled in it. The short-lived wisdom of the foolish shepherd for his own ends should also be his destruction.

16. I will raise up. God supplies the strength or wisdom which men abuse to sin. He, in His Providence, disposeth the circumstances, of which the ambitious avail themselves. Anti-Christ, whom the Jews look for, will be as much an instrument of God for the perfecting the elect, as the Chaldees<sup>19</sup> or the Assyrians<sup>20</sup> whom God raised up, for the chastisement of His former people, or the Medes against Babylon<sup>21</sup>.

phesias, of Malachi and of Isaiah as Isaiah's (S. Mark i. 2, 8). S. Matthew blends in one, words of Isaiah (lxii. 1) and Zechariah (ix. 9) as “the prophet” (S. Matt. xxi. 4, 5). Our Lord unites Is. lvi. 7, and Jer. vii. 11, with the words, “It is written.”

Of earlier fathers Tertullian simply quotes the prophecy as Jeremiah's (adv. Marc. iv. 40). Origen says, “Jeremiah is not said to have prophesied this anywhere in his books, either what are read in the Churches, or reported (referuntur) among the Jews. I suspect that it is an error of writing, or that it is some secret writing of Jeremiah wherein it is written.” (in S. Matt. p. 918.) Eusebius says, “Consider since this, is not in the Prophet Jeremiah, whether we must think that it was removed from it by some wickedness, or whether it was a clerical error of those who made the copies of the Gospels carelessly.” Dem. with oil and wine, and then bound up with splinters placed round about it."

Nor feed that which standeth still, better, the whole<sup>5</sup>, as the word always means, "in its good estate," like our prayer,
"that Thou wouldest strengthen those who do stand."

17. Woe to the idol shepherd, (a shepherd of nothingness, one who hath no quality of a shepherd<sup>1</sup>;) who leaveth the flock.
The condemnation of the evil shepherd is complete in the abandonment of the sheep; as our Lord says, "He that is an hireling and not the Shepherd, whose own the sheep are not,

he promised himself falsely, shall be obscured in everlasting darkness." "Above and against the power of Anti-Christ, shall be the virtue and vengeance and sentence of Christ,
Who shall slay him with the breath of His mouth." The right arm, the symbol of might, and the right eye which was to direct its aim, should fail together, through the judgement of God against him. He, lately boastful and persecuting, shall become blind and powerless, bereft alike of wisdom and strength.

The "right" in Holy Scripture being so often a symbol of what is good, the left of what is evil, it may be also imagined, that "the left eye, i.e. the acumen and cunning to devise deadly frauds, will remain uninjured: while the right eye, i.e.
counsel to guard against evil, will be sunk in thick darkness.
And so, the more he employs his ability to evil, the more frantically will he bring to bear destruction upon himself."

XII. "From 'I will make Jerusalem' to 'Awake, O sword,' there is a threefold exposition. For some of the Jews say that these things have already been fulfilled in part from Zorobabel to Cn. Pompey who, first of the Romans, took Judaea and the temple, as Josephus relates. Others think that it is to be fulfilled at the end of the world, when Jerusalem shall be restored, which the miserable Jewish race promiseth itself with its anointed, of whom we read above as the foolish shepherd. But others, i.e. we who are called by the name of Christ, say that these things are daily fulfilled, and will be fulfilled in the Church to the end of the world."

1. The burden of the word of the Lord for, rather, upon<sup>16</sup> Israel. If this prophecy is a continuation of the last, notwithstanding its fresh title, then Israel must be the Christian Church, formed of the true Israel which believed, and the Gentiles who were grafted into them. So S. Cyril; "Having spoken sufficiently of the Good Shepherd Christ, and of the foolish, most cruel shepherd who butchered the sheep, i.e.
Anti-Christ, he seasonably makes mention of the persecutions which would from time to time arise against Israel; not the Israel according to the flesh, but the spiritual, that Jerusalem which is indeed holy, the Church of the Living God. For as we say, that he is spiritually a Jew, who hath the circumcision in the heart, that through the Spirit, and not in the flesh through the letter; so also may Israel be conceived, not that of the blood of Israel, but rather that, which has a mind beholding God. But such are all who are called to sanctification through the faith in Christ, and who, in Him and by Him, know of God the Father. For this is the one true elected way of beholding God."

stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and <sup>b</sup>formeth the spirit of man within him.

Since the Good Shepherd was rejected by all, except the poor of the flock, the little flock which believed in Him, and thereupon the band of brotherhood was dissolved between Israel and Judah, Israel in those times could not be Israel after the flesh, which then too was the deadly antagonist of the true Israel, and thus early also chose Anti-Christ, such as was Bar-Cochba, with whom so many hundreds of thousands perished. There was no war then against Jerusalem, since it had ceased to be <sup>1</sup>.

But Zechariah does not say that this prophecy, to which he has annexed a separate title, follows, in time, upon the last; rather, since he has so separated it by its title, he has marked it as a distinct prophecy from the preceding. It may be, that he began again from the time of the Maccabees and took God's deliverances of the people Israel then, as the foreground of the deliverances to the end <sup>2</sup>. Yet in the times of Antiochus, it was one people only which was against the Jews, and Zechariah himself speaks only of the Greeks <sup>3</sup>; here he repeatedly emphasises that they were all nations <sup>4</sup>. It may then rather be, that the future, the successive efforts of the world to crush the people of God, and its victory amid suffering, and its conversions of the world through the penitent looking to Jesus, are exhibited in one great perspective, according to the manner of prophecy, which mostly exhibits the prominent events, not their order or sequence. "The penitential act of contrite sinners, especially of Jews, looking at Him Whom they pierced, dates from the Day of Pentecost, and continues to the latter days, when it will be greatly intensified and will produce blessed results, and is here concentrated into one focus. The rising up of God's enemies against Christ's Church, which commenced at the same time, and has been continued in successive persecutions from Jews, Gentiles, and other unbelievers in every age, and which will reach its climax in the great Anti-Christian outbreak of the last times, and be confounded by the Coming of Christ to judgement, is here summed up in one panoramic picture, exhibited at once to the eye."

Which stretcheth forth the heavens. God's creative power is an ever-present working, as our Lord says, My Father worketh hitherto and I work. His preservation of the things which He has created is a continual re-creation. All "forces" are supported by Him, Who Alone hath life in Himself. He doth not the less uphold all things by the word of His power, because, until the successive generations, with or without their will, with or against His Will for them, shall have completed His Sovereign Will, He upholds them uniformly in being by His Unchanging Will. Man is ever forgetting this, and because, since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as from the beginning of the creation, they relegate the Creator and His creating as far as they can to some time, as far back as they can imagine, enough to fill their imaginations, and forget Him Who made them, in Whose hands is their eternity, Who will be their Judge. So the prophets remind them and us of His continual working, which men forget in the sight of His works; <sup>5</sup> Thus saith the Lord; He that createth the heavens, and stretcheth them out; He that spreadeth forth the earth and its produce, Who giveth breath to the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein; and, I am the Lord Who maketh all things, Who stretcheth out the heavens alone, Who spreadeth abroad the earth by Myself; speaking at once of that, past in its beginning yet present to us in its continuance, but to Him ever-present present; and of things actually present to us, <sup>10</sup> that frustrateth the tokens of the liars; and of things to those of that day still future, that confirmeth the word of His servant, and performeth the counsel of His messengers; the beginning of which was not to be till the taking of Babylon. And the Psalmist unites past and present in one, <sup>12</sup> Donning light as a garment, stretching out the heavens as a curtain; Who layeth the beams of His chambers on the waters, Who maketh the clouds His chariot; Who walketh on the wings of the wind; Who maketh His angels spirits, His ministers a flame of fire; He founded the earth upon its base. And Amos, <sup>13</sup> He that formeth the mountains and createth the winds, and declareth unto man his thoughts;—adding whatever lieth nearest to each of us.

And formeth the spirit of man within him, both by the unceasing creation of souls, at every moment in some spot in our globe, or by the re-creation, for which David prays, <sup>14</sup> Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me. He Who formed the hearts of men can overrule them as He wills. <sup>15</sup> But the spirit of man is formed by God in him, not by being called to the beginnings of being, although it was made by Him, but, as it were, transformed from weakness to strength, from unmanliness to endurance, altogether being transelemented from things shameful to better things."

<sup>16</sup> It is the wont of the holy Prophets, when about to declare beforehand things of no slight moment, to endeavour to shew beforehand the Almightyness of God, that their word may obtain credence, though they should declare what was beyond all hope, and (to speak of our conceptions) above all reason and credibility."

2. I will make Jerusalem a cup of trembling <sup>16</sup>. For encouragement, He promises the victory, and at first mentions the attack incidentally. Jerusalem is as a cup or basin, which its enemies take into their hands; a stone, which they put forth their strength to lift; but they themselves reel with the draught of God's judgements which they would give to others, they are torn by the stone which they would lift to fling. The image of the cup is mostly of God's displeasure, which is given to His own people, and then, His judgement of chastisement being exceeded, given in turn to those who had been the instruments of giving it <sup>17</sup>. Thus Isaiah speaks of the cup of trembling. <sup>1</sup>Thou, Jerusalem, hast drunk the dregs of the cup of trembling, hast wrung them out. Therefore hear thou this, thou afflicted and drunken but not with wine. Thus saith thy Lord, the Lord, and thy God that pleadeth the cause of His people, Behold, I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, the dregs of the cup of My fury; thou shalt no more drink it again: but I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee. Jeremiah speaks of the cup of God's anger, as given by God first to Jerusalem, then to all whom Nebuchadnezzar should subdue, then to Babylon itself<sup>2</sup>; and as passing through to Edom also<sup>3</sup>; Ezekiel, of Aholibah<sup>4</sup> (Jerusalem) drinking the cup of Samaria. In Jeremiah alone, Babylon is herself the cup. <sup>5</sup>Babylon is a golden cup in the Lord's hand, that made all the nations drunken; the nations have drunken of the wine; therefore the nations are mad. Now Jerusalem is to be, not an ordinary cup, but a large basin<sup>6</sup> or vessel, from which all nations may drink what will make them reel.

And also upon Judah will it be in the siege against Jerusalem, i. e. the burden of the word<sup>7</sup> of the Lord which was on Israel should be upon Judah, i. e. upon all, great and small.

3. I will make Jerusalem a burdensome stone to all nations. What is a stone to all nations? It is not a rock or anything in its own nature immovable, but a stone, a thing rolled up and down, moved, lifted, displaced, piled on others, in every way at the service and command of men, to do with it what they willed. So they thought of that <sup>8</sup>stone cut out without hands; that <sup>9</sup>tried stone and sure foundation, laid in Zion; that stone which, God said in Zechariah<sup>10</sup>, I have laid; of which our Lord says, <sup>11</sup>the stone, which the builders rejected, is become the head of the corner; <sup>12</sup>whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken, but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. The Church, built on the stone, seems a thing easily annihilated; ten persecutions in succession strove to efface it; Diocletian erected a monument, commemorating that the Christian name was blotted out<sup>13</sup>. It survived; he perished. The image may have been suggested by the custom, so widely prevailing in Judæa, of trying the relative strength of young men, by lifting round stones selected for that end<sup>14</sup>. <sup>15</sup>The meaning then is, I will place Jerusalem to all nations like a very heavy stone<sup>16</sup> to be lifted up. They will lift it up, and according to their varied strength, will waste it; but it must needs be, that, while it is lifted, in the very strain of lifting

<sup>7</sup> כֶּסֶף is the only natural subject, as in ix. 1, the burden of the Lord is on the land of Hadrach, but it is subjoined, Damascus is the resting place thereof &c. The E. V. does not seem grammatical. The E. M. is too elliptical, as also that other, "it will be laid upon Jerusalem to be in the siege against Jerusalem." Had "the cup of trembling" been the subject, it had probably been לִיכָה, as לִיכָה is the subject; for countries, as Judah, are not the objects of siege. <sup>8</sup> Dan. ii. 45. <sup>9</sup> Is. xxviii. 16.

the weight, that most heavy stone should leave some scission or rasure on the bodies of those who lift it. Of the Church it may be interpreted thus; that all persecutors, who fought against the house of the Lord, are inebriated with that cup, which Jeremiah gives to all nations, to drink and be inebriated and fall and vomit and be mad. Whosoever would uplift the stone shall lift it, and in the anger of the Lord, whereby He chastens sinners, will hold it in his hands; but he himself will not go unpunished, the sword of the Lord fighting against him."

All that burden themselves with it will be cut to pieces<sup>17</sup>, more exactly, scarified, lacerated; shall bear the scars. Though (rather, and) all the people [peoples, nations] of the earth shall be gathered together against it. The prophet marshals them all against Jerusalem, only to say how they should perish before it. So in Joel God says, <sup>18</sup>I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down to the valley of Jehoshaphat, speaking of that last closing strife of Anti-Christ against God. Wars against Israel had either been petty, though Anti-theistic, wars of neighbouring petty nations, pitting their false gods against the True, or one, though world-empire wielded by a single will. The more God made Himself known, the fiercer the opposition. The Gospel claiming <sup>19</sup>obedience to the faith among all nations, provoked universal rebellion. Herod and Pontius Pilate became friends through rejection of Christ; the Roman Caesar and the Persian Sapor, Goths and Vandals, at war with one another, were one in persecuting Christ and the Church. Yet in vain;

4. In that day, saith the Lord, I will smite every horse with astonishment, stupefying. Zechariah revives the words concentrated by Moses, to express the stupefaction at their ills, which God would accumulate upon His people, if they perseveringly rebelled against Him. Each expresses the intensity of the visitation<sup>20</sup>. The horse and his rider had, through Moses' song at the Red Sea, become the emblem of worldly power, overthrown. That song opens; <sup>21</sup>I will sing unto the Lord; for He hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath He cast into the sea. The scared cavalry throws into confusion the ranks, of which it was the boast and strength.

And on the house of Judah I will open My eyes, in pity and love and guidance, as the Psalmist says, <sup>22</sup>I will counsel, throughout Judæa, that in villages towns and forts, round stones are placed, of very great weight, on which young men are wont to practise themselves, and according to their varying strength, lift them, some to the knees, others to the navel, others to the shoulders, and head; others lift the weight above the head, with their two hands raised straight up, shewing the greatness of their strength. In the Acropolis at Athens, I saw a brass globe, of very great weight, which I, with my little weak body, could scarcely move. When I asked its object, I was told by the inhabitants, that the strength of wrestlers was proved by that mass, and that no one went to a match, until it was ascertained by the lifting of that weight, who ought to be set against whom." David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord before them.

9 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem.

It is not simply one feeble, but one stumbling<sup>1</sup> and ready to fall, who becomes as David, the great instance of one who fell, yet was raised. Daniel says of a like trial-time,<sup>2</sup> And some of those of understanding shall stumble, to try them and to purge and to make them white, to the time of the end. "<sup>3</sup> Such care will God have of protecting the sons of the Church, when it shall be infested with persecutions, that he who shall have fallen through human infirmity, either deceived by heretics or overcome by fear of tortures, shall arise the more fervent and cautious, and with many tears shall make amends for his sins to God, as did David. He who stumbled shall be as David, because the sinner returneth to repentance. This is not said of all times, nor of all (for many have stumbled, who never rose) but chiefly of the first times of the Church and of men of great sanctity, such as were many then."

And the house of David shall be as God. They who stumbled became really like David; but he, though mighty and a great saint of God, though he once fell, was man. How then could the house of David be really like God? Only fully in Him, Who, <sup>4</sup> being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; Who said, <sup>5</sup> He who hath seen Me, hath seen My Father also; <sup>6</sup> I and the Father are one. And this the prophet brings out by adding, as the Angel of the Lord before them, i.e. that one Angel of the Lord, in whom His very Presence and His Name was; Who went before them, to guide them<sup>7</sup>. Else, having said, like God, it had been to lessen what he had just said, to add, like the Angel of the Lord. Our Lord prayed for those who are truly His, <sup>8</sup> As Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they may be one in Us; that they may be one as We are one, I in them and Thou in Me, that they may be perfect in one; and S. Paul saith, <sup>9</sup> Christ is formed in us; <sup>10</sup> Christ dwelleth in our hearts by faith; <sup>11</sup> Christ liveth in me; <sup>12</sup> Christ is in you; <sup>13</sup> Christ is our life; <sup>14</sup> Christ is all and in all; <sup>15</sup> we grow into Him which is the Head, even Christ; <sup>16</sup> we are in Christ; and S. Peter, we are <sup>17</sup> partakers of the Divine nature; and S. John, <sup>18</sup> As He is, so are we in this world. Then in a

9. In that day, I will seek to destroy. Woe indeed to those, whom Almighty God shall "seek to destroy!" Man may seek earnestly to do, what at last he cannot do. Still it is an earnest seeking. And whether it is used of human seeking which fails<sup>20</sup>, or which succeeds<sup>21</sup>, inchoate<sup>22</sup> or permitted<sup>23</sup>, it is always used of seeking to do, what it is a person's set purpose to do if he can<sup>20</sup>. Here it is spoken of Almighty God<sup>24</sup>. "<sup>25</sup> He saith not, 'I will destroy' but I will seek to destroy, i.e. it shall ever be My care to destroy all the enemies of the Church, that they may in no way prevail against it: this I will do alway to the end of the world."

10. And I will pour, as He promised by Joel<sup>25</sup>, I will pour out My Spirit upon all flesh, largely, abundantly, upon the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, all, highest and lowest, from first to last, the Spirit of grace and supplication, i.e. the Holy Spirit which conveyeth grace, as <sup>26</sup> the Spirit of wisdom and understanding is the Spirit infusing wisdom and understanding, and the Spirit of counsel and might is that same Spirit, imparting the gift of counsel to see what is to be done and of might to do it, and the Spirit of the knowledge and of the fear of the Lord is that same Spirit, infusing loving acquaintance with God, with awe at His infinite Majesty. So the Spirit of grace and supplication, is that same Spirit, infusing grace and bringing into a state of favour with God, and a Spirit of supplication<sup>27</sup> is that Spirit, calling out of the inmost soul the cry for a yet larger measure of the grace already given. S. Paul speaks of <sup>28</sup> the love of God poured out in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given unto us; and of <sup>29</sup> insulting the Spirit of grace, rudely repulsing the Spirit, Who giveth grace. "<sup>30</sup> When God Himself says, 'I will pour out,' He sets forth the greatness of His bountifulness whereby He bestoweth all things."

old Verss., Jewish or Christian. LXX. Aq. Sym. Theod. Chald. Syr. Vulg. In the 16th cent., the Jews had begun to make a marginal correction into לֹא, but did not venture to change the text. "Where we, according to the faith of Holy Scripture, read, in the Person of God, 'and they shall look to Me Whom they pierced,' though, in the text itself of the book, they were deterred by God's Providence from making a change, yet without, in the margin, they have it noted, 'they shall look to him whom they pierced.' And so they hand down to their disciples, that they should transcribe, as it is contained in the text, and read, as they have noted, outside; so that they may hold, according to their phrenzy, that the Jews look to him, whom Gog and Magog pierced." Rabanus Maurus c. Jud. n. 12. In the 13th. cent. Martini says, that "all the old MSS. of the Jews have לֹא;" and that the "perfidy of some modern Jews, unable to deprave so evident a testimony to the divinity of the Messiah, say, that it is not לֹא but לֹא." f. 666. In f. 328, he again says, "some Jews falsify the text;" and (f. 329) that "now (jam) in many MSS. they have corrupted their text, but that they are refuted by the Targum, the Talmud, and by many ancient MSS., in which this text is not yet corrupted, and by the exposition of Rashi." R. Isaac, at the end of the 16th. cent. A.D. 1593, quoted the reading לֹא without doubt, though he was expressly controverting the Christian argument. "They say, that heretofore the sons of Israel shall mourn, because they pierced and slew the Messiah sent to them, Jesus who is compounded of Godhead and Manhood, and they say, that this is (the meaning of) 'they shall look to me whom they pierced.'" (Chizzuk Emunah in Wagenseil Teila ign. Sat. pp. 803, 804.) He explains it of the wars of Gog and Magog. "If they shall see that they [their enemies] shall pierce through even one of them, they shall be amazed and shall look to me, eth asher dakaroo, i.e. on account of him, whom they pierced—So that the Nazarenes have no help from the words לֹא אֲשֶׁר דָּקְרוּ אֵלַי מִיָּדְךָ;" (Ib. pp. 307, 308;) and he subjoins, that if he who was wounded had been the same as he to whom they should look, it ought to have gone on in the first person, מִיָּדְךָ עָלַי, and מִיָּדְךָ עָלַי, like מִיָּדְךָ עָלַי. Ib. 309. R. Lipmann (A.D. 1399) uses the same argument, "He should have said, and they shall mourn for me, Almighty God, Whom they have pierced<sup>1</sup>; the Head with the thorns, the Hands and Feet with the nails, the Side with the soldier's lance. The prophecy began to be fulfilled as soon as the deed was completed, and Jesus had yielded up His Spirit: when <sup>2</sup> all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things which were done, smote their breasts and returned. <sup>3</sup> When they had nailed the Divine Shrine to the Wood, they who had crucified Him, stood around, impiously mocking.—But when He had laid down His life for us, <sup>4</sup> the centurion and they that were with him, watching Jesus, seeing the earthquake and those things which were done, feared greatly, saying, Truly this was the Son of God. As it ever is with sin, compunction did not come till the sin was over: till then, it was overlaid; else the sin could not be done. At the first conversion, the three thousand were pricked<sup>5</sup> in the heart, when told that He <sup>6</sup> Whom they had taken and with wicked hands had crucified and slain, is Lord and Christ. This awoke the first penitence of him who became S. Paul. Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me? This has been the centre of Christian devotion ever since, the security against passion, the impulse to self-denial, the parent of zeal for souls, the incentive to love; this has struck the rock, that it gushed forth in tears of penitence: this is the strength and vigour of hatred of sin, to look to Him Whom our sins pierced, Who S. Paul says, loved me and gave Himself for me. <sup>7</sup> We all lifted Him up upon the Cross; we transfixed with the nails His Hands and Feet; we pierced His Side with the spear. For if man had not sinned; the Son of God would have endured no torment."

And they shall mourn for Him, as one mourneth for an only son, and shall be in bitterness for Him, as one that is in bitterness for a first-born. We feel most sensibly the sorrows of this life, passing as they are; and of these, the loss of an only son is a proverbial sorrow. <sup>8</sup> O daughter of My people, gird thee with sackcloth and wallow thyself in ashes, God says; make thee the mourning of an only son, most bitter lamentation. <sup>9</sup> I will make it as the mourning of an only son. The dead man carried out, the only son of his mother and she was a widow, is recorded as having touched the heart of Jesus. <sup>10</sup> And our Lord, to the letter, was the Only-Begotten of as he began, they shall look to me." p. 144 ed. Haecksp. Ibn Ezra agrees with this, for he explains it in the first person, "Then shall all nations look to me (אלי) to see what I shall do to those who have slain Messiah b. Joseph." Alsheikh's commentary requires the same, "And I will yet do a third thing. And this that they shall look אלי, is that they shall hang their eyes on Me in perfect repentance when they see &c." and R. Obadiah Siporno, (Bibl. Rabb.) "and they shall look to Me in their prayer." Rashi also gives the Targ. "and they shall seek of Me" פקדון as the interpretation of אלי "they shall look to me." R. Tanchum of Jerusalem, "a learned son of a learned father," in the latter part of the 13th cent. (Grätz vii. 144, 145) knew in the East of no other reading. He explains it, "They shall flee to Me, when they see the slaying of those whom the enemy had slain of them" (Poc. 344). His contemporary, Parchon, in his lexicon Mecheberoth, cites the passage with אלי, and explains the word "piercing of a sword in the body," v. קר. The Heb. Arab. version, so often quoted by Pococke (Hunt. 206) renders, "And they turned to me, whom they rent (קצצו) the word, used by Abulwalid, only Abulwalid further explains this by קצצו. Abulwalid does not notice the reading in either of his lexica, nor Menahem b. Sarag, nor David b. Abraham.

With regard to MSS., even in later times Peter Niger [Schwarz] (a learned Benedictine of the 17th cent.) wrote, "some false and lying Jews say that it is not written, 'And they shall look on me whom they have pierced,' but 'they shall seek to him whom they have pierced'—I answer, that on my conscience and on the Christian truth I say, I have seen many Jewish Bibles [Spanish, doubtless, since he studied Hebrew in Spain] and I never, in any Bible, found it written other than vehibbitu elai and they shall look to me; and not vehibbitu elav, 'and they shall look to him,' as I will shew any one who desires to see." Stella Messia Tract. ii. c. 2. A.D. 1477 in Wolf Bibl. Hebr. iv. p. 543. Norzi, a Jewish critic, says that קר is not found in the Scriptures, only in Rashi and the Gemara. The codex Babyl. Petropol. (I am told, of the 14th. cent.) has אלי. In the collated MSS. there is the variation, common where there is a real or virtual kri, 33 Kenn,

His Father and His mother." He was <sup>11</sup> the first-begotten of every creature, and <sup>12</sup> we saw His glory, the glory as of the Only-Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. This mourning for Him Whom our sins pierced and nailed to the tree, is continued, week by week, by the pious, on the day of the week, when He suffered for us, or in the perpetual memorial of His Precious Death in the Holy Eucharist, and especially in Passion-Tide. God sends forth anew the Spirit of grace and supplication, and the faithful mourn, because of their share in His Death. The prophecy had a rich and copious fulfilment in that first conversion in the first Pentecost; a larger fulfilment awaits it in the end, when, after the destruction of Anti-Christ, <sup>13</sup> all Israel shall be converted and be saved. There is yet a more awful fulfilment; when <sup>14</sup> He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they which pierced Him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wait because of Him. But meanwhile it is fulfilled in every solid conversion of Jew Heathen or careless Christian, as well as in the devotion of the pious. Zechariah has concentrated in few words the tenderest devotion of the Gospel, They shall look on Me Whom they pierced. <sup>15</sup> Zechariah teaches that among the various feelings which we can elicit from the meditation on the Passion of Christ, as admiration, love, gratitude, compunction, fear, penitence, imitation, patience, joy, hope, the feeling of compassion stands eminent, and that it is this, which we peculiarly owe to Christ suffering for us. For who would not in his inmost self grieve with Christ, innocent and holy, yea the Only-Begotten Son of God, when he sees Him nailed to the Cross and enduring so lovingly for him sufferings so manifold and so great? Who would not groan out commiseration, and melt into tears? Truly says S. Bonaventure in his 'goad of Divine love': 'What can be more fruitful, what sweeter than, with the whole heart, to suffer with that most bitter suffering of our Lord Jesus Christ?'"

MSS. and 6 de R. have אלי; 3 have אלי marked on the marg., one as a kri; 7 K. and 5 de R. had אלי corrected into אלי; 4 K., 5 de R. had אלי corrected into אלי; 11 K., 5 de R. had a kri in marg. אלי. "The most and best MSS have אלי." De R. Ewald's ground for rejecting the reading אלי illustrates the Jewish. "קר is, from the context which speaks of mourning for the dead, and the language of the prophet (xiii. 3), clear; but for אלי, we must, with many MSS., read אלי. The first person were wholly unsuited here. It is at variance with the following וקר, and introduces into the Old Testament the senselessness, that one is to weep over Jahve, (for Jahve [Almighty God] must be the subject.) as over one dead, (who should never come back again!)." De Rossi suggests that the אלי came in accidentally, the scribe having in his mind Ps. xxxiv. 6, רב אלי רב.

There can equally be no question about the meaning of קר (as even Ew. and Hitz. admit) or about the construction. קר (which occurs 11 times, is everywhere "thrust through." In one place only, Lam. iv. 9, קרקר. "thrust through," occurs as a synonyme of קלל קר "those wounded by hunger" and that, in contrast with קלל קר "wounded by the sword." So also the noun, קרקרות, "the piercings of the sword," Ps. xii. 18. In regard to the construction, אלי occurs in 97 places in the Bible, and in every place in the meaning "he who," "that which," "this that." In one place only Deut. xxix. 18, 14, אלי having been previously used as a preposition, "and not with you only, (אנכם) do I make this covenant," the אלי is again used as a preposition, carrying on the construction, "but with him who, אלי, Frischmuth (de Messia confixo) mentions 14 ways, by which "because" might without ambiguity have been expressed (see Pusey's Univ. Sermons p. 142). There is then no excuse for the renderings αὐτὸς ὁ θεός, LXX. or Αὐτὸς ὁ θεός. Theod. has πρὸς μὲν, εἰς δὲ ἐκείνησαν.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 The fountain of purgation for Jerusalem, 2 from idolatry, and false prophecy. 7 The death of Christ, and the trial of a third part.

Josiah's death the last gleam of the sunset of Judah faded into night. Of him it is recorded, that his pious acts, according to what was written in the law of the Lord, were written in his country's history<sup>1</sup>; for him the prophet Jeremiah wrote a dirge<sup>2</sup>; all the minstrels of his country spoke of him in their dirges<sup>3</sup>. The dirges were made an ordinance which survived the captivity; to this day<sup>4</sup>, it is said at the close of the Chronicles. Among the gathering sorrows of Israel, this lament over Josiah was written in the national collection of dirges<sup>5</sup>. Hadadrinmon, as being compounded of the name of two Syrian idols, is, in its name, a witness how Syrian idolatry penetrated into the kingdom, when it was detached from the worship of God. It was <sup>6</sup> "a city near Jezreel, now called Maximianopolis in the plain of Megiddon, in which the righteous king Josiah was wounded by Pharaoh Necho." This <sup>7</sup> "was 17 miles from Cæsarea, 10 from Esdrælon." Its name still survives in a small village, south of Megiddon<sup>8</sup>, and so, on the way back to Jerusalem.

12-14. This sorrow should be universal but also individual, the whole land, and that, family by family; the royal family in the direct line of its kings, and in a branch from Nathan, a son of David and whole brother of Solomon<sup>9</sup>, which was continued on in private life, yet was still to be an ancestral line of Jesus<sup>10</sup>; in like way the main priestly family from Levi, and a subordinate line from a grandson of Levi, the family of Shimei<sup>11</sup>; and all the remaining families, each with their separate sorrow, each according to Joel's call, <sup>12</sup> let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber and the bride out of her closet, each denying himself the tenderest solaces of life.

<sup>13</sup> The ungrateful and ungodly, daily, as far as in them lies, crucify Christ, as S. Paul says, <sup>14</sup> crucifying to themselves the Son of God afresh and putting Him to an open shame. And on these Christ, out of His boundless pity, poureth forth a spirit of grace and supplication, so that, touched with compunction, with grieving and tearful feeling, they look on Christ, suffering with His suffering, and bewailing their own impurities.

<sup>15</sup> The likeness is in the sorrow, not in its degree. Josiah had restored religion, removed a dire superstition, bound up relaxed morals by healthful discipline, recalled to its former condition the sinking state. In their extremest needs light shone on them, when there came his unlooked-for death, Therewith the whole state seemed lost. So in the Death of Christ, they who loved Him, saw His Divine works, placed their whole hope of salvation in His goodness, suddenly saw the stay of their life extinct, themselves deprived of that most sweet intercourse, all hope for the future cut off. But the grief in the death of Christ was the more bitter, as He awoke a greater longing for Himself, and had brought a firmer hope of salvation.

XIII. 1. In that day there shall be a fountain opened. Zechariah often repeats, in that day<sup>16</sup>, resuming his subject again and again, as a time not proximate, but fixed and known of God, of which he declared somewhat. It is that day which <sup>17</sup> Abraham desired to see, and saw it, whether by direct revelation, or in the typical sacrifice of Isaac, and was glad: it was <sup>18</sup> that day which many prophets and kings and righteous men desired to see, and in patience waited for it: the one day of salvation of the Gospel. He had spoken of repentance, in contemplation of Christ crucified; he now speaks of forgiveness and cleansing, of sanctification and consequent obedience. The fountain shall be not simply opened, but shall remain open<sup>19</sup>. Isaiah had already prophesied of the refreshment of the Gospel. <sup>20</sup> When the poor and needy seek water and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I, the Lord, will hear them, I, the God of Israel, will not forsake them. I will open rivers in high places and fountains in the midst of the valleys; here it is added, for sin and for uncleanness. There were divers<sup>21</sup> symbolical washings under the law; the Levites were <sup>22</sup> sprinkled with the water of purifying, lit. the water of taking away of sin: living waters<sup>23</sup>, put to the ashes of an heifer, were appointed as a <sup>24</sup> water for (removing) defilements; a cleansing of sin<sup>25</sup>. Now, there should be one ever-open fountain for all the house of David. <sup>26</sup> Who that fountain is, the Lord Himself teacheth through Jeremiah, they have forsaken Me, the fountain of living waters; and in the Gospel He says, If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink; and The water which I shall give him, is a fountain of living water, gushing up to everlasting life. This was open to the house of David; for of that kindred He took human nature. It was opened also for the dwellers of Jerusalem, for the sprinkling of holy Baptism, through which we have received remission of sins." "That, receiving Divine and holy Baptism, we are sprinkled with the Blood of Christ to the remission of sins, who can doubt?" "Of this fountain much was foretold by Ezekiel<sup>3</sup>, that a fountain should issue forth from the temple of the Lord, and go down into the desert, and every soul, to whom it shall come, shall live; and Joel, A fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord, and water the valley of Shittim. Of this fountain Peter said to the Jews, when pricked in the heart and seeking forgiveness, Let every one of you be baptised in the Name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

They dug to obtain any how a larger supply of water. Is. xxxvii. 25; Isaac's servants by digging obtained "a well of living" i.e. flowing "water" Gen. xxvi. 19. It is parallel with  $\text{בְּקֶרֶן}$  Hos. xiii. 15., where cistern or reservoir would be unmeaning. Metaphorically, fountain of living water Jer. xxii. 13. fountain of life Ps. xxxvi. 10. 2 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD of hosts, that I will cut off the names of the idols out of the land, and they shall no more be remembered: and also I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land.

3 And it shall come to pass, that when any shall yet prophesy, then his father

2. I will cut off the names of the idols. This had been a fence against idolatry. To name evil is a temptation to evil. Wrong words are the parents of wrong acts. To speak of evil awakens curiosity or passion; curiosity is one of the strongest incentives to act. All public mention of terrible crimes (it has been observed) produces imitation of the specific form of crime. Hence it was commanded, make no mention of the name of other gods, neither let it be heard out of thy mouth. And Joshua names it in his dying charge to Israel, Be ye therefore very strong to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moses—neither make mention of the name of their gods, nor cause to swear by them. Hence they changed the names of cities<sup>8</sup>, which bore idol names. David speaks of it, as part of fealty to God. I will not take their names upon my lips. Hosea prophesies of the times of the new covenant; I will take away the names of Baalim out of her mouth, and they shall be no more remembered by their name. Isaiah, The idols he shall utterly abolish. Zechariah foretells their abolition with a turn of words, formed apparently on those of Hosea<sup>12</sup>; but slightly varied, because the worship of Baal, such a plague-spot in the time of Hosea, one, which continued until the year before the captivity<sup>13</sup>, was gone. He implies nothing as to his own times, whether idolatry still existed. He predicts its entire abolition in the whole compass of the enlarged Judah, i.e. of Christendom.

And also I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land. False prophecy sets itself to meet a craving of human nature to know something of its future. False prophets there were, even in the time of Nehemiah<sup>14</sup>, and those in some number, hired to prophesy against the word of God. Our Lord warns against them. Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. <sup>16</sup> Many false prophets shall and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live; for thou speakest lies in the name of the LORD: and his father and his mother that begat him shall thrust him through when he prophesieth.

4 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the prophets shall be ashamed every arise and shall deceive many. Many false prophets, S. John says, are gone out into the world. False prophets attended the decline of Judaism. Such was the author of the Jewish Sibylline book, prophesying the destruction of the Romans<sup>18</sup>, and fixing the mind of his people on temporal aggrandisement<sup>19</sup>: false prophets were suborned by the Jewish "tyrants" and encouraged the Jews in the resistance which ruined the devoted city<sup>20</sup>: false prophets have arisen in Christianity; but, like the Phrygian women who led Tertullian astray, they "went out," were cast out "from it, as not being of it." "After that the Only-Begotten Word of God appeared to us, the dull and childish toys of idolatry perished and were utterly destroyed, and with it were taken away the strange and impious devices of the false prophets, who were full of the evil, unclean spirit, and could be readily detected as labouring under a kindred disease to the idolaters. For both had one president of impiety, Satan." Not 50 years after the Crucifixion, a heathen<sup>21</sup> wrote his work, "on the failure of oracles." The outpouring of the Holy Spirit of grace and supplication, should sweep away the unclean spirit, (Zechariah alone anticipates the language of the New Testament<sup>23</sup>) which became a lying spirit in the mouth of the prophets of those who sought to them.

3. His father and mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live. The prophet describes the zeal against false prophecy, with reference to the law against those who seduced to apostasy from God. <sup>26</sup> The nearest relations were themselves to denounce any who had secretly tried to seduce them, and themselves, as the accusers, to cast the first stone at them. "Such shall in those times be the reverence to God-wards, so careful shall they be of perfect probity and laudable life, that parents themselves shall be stimulated against their children, if they should speak falsely any thing from their own heart, as though God spake by them—How true that word is, and how accredited the prophecy! This indicates clearly a great advance towards godliness, God transforming things for the better. What aforesaid was held in great esteem, is now hated and accursed and held intolerable."

4. The prophets shall be ashamed, every one of them. They who before their conversion, gave themselves to such deceits, shall be ashamed of their deeds; as, after the defeat of the seven sons of the chief priest Sceva, fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified, and many that believed came and confessed and shewed their deeds: many of them also which used curious arts brought their books together and burned them before all, and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver. So mightily, S. Luke subjoins, grew the word of God and prevaild.

Neither shall wear a rough garment to deceive, feigning themselves ascetics and mourners for their people, as the true prophets were in truth. The sackcloth, which the prophets wore<sup>1</sup>, was a rough garment of hair<sup>2</sup>, worn next to the skin<sup>3</sup>, whence Elijah was known to Ahaziah, when described as <sup>4</sup> a hairy man, and girl with a girdle of leather about his loins. It was a wide garment, enveloping the whole frame<sup>5</sup>, and so, afflictive to the whole body. "This was the habit of the prophets, that when they called the people to penitence, they were clothed with sackcloth."

5. And he shall say, repudiating his former claims, I am a husbandman<sup>7</sup>: for a man hath taught<sup>8</sup> me from my youth.
There was no room then for his having been a false prophet, since he had had from his youth one simple unlettered occupation, as Amos said truly of himself; <sup>9</sup> I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son: but I was an herdsman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. The prophet does not approve the lie, any more than our Lord did the injustice of the unjust steward. Our Lord contrasted the wisdom in their generation of a bad man for his ends, with the unwisdom of the children of light, who took no pains to secure their God. Zechariah pictures vividly, how men would anyhow rid themselves of all suspicion of false-prophesying.

6. And one shall say unto him, What are those wounds in thy hands? The words are simple; the meaning different<sup>10</sup>, according as they are united with what immediately precedes, or the main subject, Him Whom they pierced, for Whom they were to mourn, and, on their mourning, to be cleansed, and of Whom it is said in the next verse, Awake, O sword, against My Shepherd. S. Jerome and others<sup>11</sup> explain it of the punishment inflicted by parents. "These wounds and bruises I received, condemned by the judgement of my parents, and of those who did not hate but loved me. And so will truth prevail dissipating falsehood, that he too, who was punished for his own fault, will own that he suffered rightly." But wounds of chastisement are not inflicted on the hands, far shall I arise against this Thy Shepherd, he subjoins, Smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered. Hence the Shepherd Himself, when about to be smitten, spake, All ye shall be offended because of Me this night. For it is written, I will smite the Shepherd and the sheep shall be scattered. So then to those who say, what are those wounds in the midst of Thy hands? is appositely subjoined the Voice of the Father, saying, Awake, O sword, against My Shepherd &c. in the meaning, 'They are monuments of the Father's love, the tokens of My Obedience, because He spared not His own Son, and I became obedient to Him for you all, even unto death, and that, the death of the Cross.'

7. Awake, O sword. So Jeremiah apostrophises the sword, O thou sword of the Lord, when wilt thou be quiet? The prophets express what will be, by a command that it should be; Make the heart of this people heavy. But by this command he signifies that human malice, acting freely, could do no more than His Hand and His counsel determined before to be done. The envy and hatred of Satan, the blind fury of the Chief priests, the contempt of Herod, the guilty cowardice of Pilate, freely accomplished that Death, which God had before decreed for the salvation of the world. The meaning then is, "the sword shall be aroused against My Shepherd, i.e. I will allow Him to be smitten by the Jews. But by the sword he designates death, persecution, wounding &c. as above, the sword upon his right arm, and, where the Passion of Christ is spoken of, Deliver my soul from the sword. So also, All the sinners of the people shall die by the sword, "which cannot be taken literally; for many sinners perish by shipwreck, poison, drowning, fire." Amos then "so spake, because many died by war, yet not all by the sword, but others by pestilence and famine, all which he includes under the sword. This smiting began, when the Lord was taken, and His sheep began to be scattered; but the prophecy which, before, was being gradually fulfilled, was fully fulfilled in His Death, and the Apostles were dispersed till the day of the Resurrection at eventide."

Against the Man, My Fellow<sup>10</sup>, i.e. One united by community of nature. A little before, God had spoken of Himself as priced at the thirty pieces of silver, yet as breaking the covenant which He had made with all nations for His people; as pierced through, yet as pouring the spirit of grace and supplication on those who pierced Him, that they should mourn their deed, and as, thereon, ever cleansing them from sin. As Man, God was sold, was pierced. "God, in flesh, not working with aught intervening as in the prophets, but having taken to Him a Manhood connatural<sup>12</sup> with Himself and made one, and through His flesh akin to us, drawing up to Him all humanity. What was the manner of the Godhead in flesh? As fire in iron, not transitively but by communication. For the fire does not dart into the iron, but remains there and communicates to it of its own virtue, not impaired by the communication, yet filling wholly its recipient." The bold language of the Fathers only expressed the actuality of the Incarnation. Since the Manhood was taken into God, and in Him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and God and Man were one Christ, then was it all true language. His Body was "the Body of God;" His flesh "the flesh of the Word;" and it was lawful to speak of "the flesh of the Deity," of "the Passion of the Word," "the Passion of Christ, my God," "the Passion of God," "God dead and buried," "God suffered," "murderers of God," "the Godhead dwelt in the flesh bodily, which is all one with saying that, being God, He had a proper body, and using this as an instrument, He became Man for our sakes, and, because of this, things proper to the flesh are said to be His, since He was in it, as hunger, thirst, suffering, fatigue and the like, of which the flesh is capable, while the works proper to the Word Himself, as raising the dead and restoring the blind, He did through His own Body," is but a continuance of the language of Zechariah, since He Who was sold, was priced, was Almighty God. Jesus being God and Man, the sufferings of His Humanity were the sufferings of God, although, as God, He could not suffer. Now, conversely, God speaks of the Shepherd Who was slain, as My Fellow, united in Nature with Himself, although not the Manhood of Jesus which suffered, but the Godhead, united with It in one Person, was Consubstantial with Himself. The name might perhaps be most nearly represented by "connatural." "When then the title is employed of the relation of an individual to God, it is clear that that individual can be no mere man, but must be one, united with God by unity of Being. The Akin of the Lord is no other than He Who said in the Gospel I and My Father are One, and Who is designated as the Only-Begotten Son, Who is in the Bosom of the Father. The word, it seems, was especially chosen, as being used in the Pentateuch, only in the laws against injuring a fellow-man. The prophet thereby gives prominence to the seeming contradiction between the command of the Lord, Awake, O sword, against My Shepherd, and those of His own law, whereby no one is to injure his fellow. He thus points out the greatness of that end, for the sake of which the Lord regards not that relation, Whose image among men He commanded to be kept holy. He speaks after the manner of men. He calls attention to the greatness of that sacrifice, whereby He spared not His own Son, but freely gave Him up for us all. The word 'Man' forms a sort of contrast with My Fellow. He Whom the sword is to reach must unite the Human Nature with the Divine." Jews too have seen that the words, My Fellow, imply an equality with God; only since they own not Him, Who was God and Man, they must interpret it of a false claim on the part of man<sup>27</sup>, overlooking that it is given Him by God.

<sup>10</sup> The word שֶׁפָּרַד, in form, abstract, is always personal. It stands alone in the dialects, having probably been framed by Moses, to express more than "neighbour," "our common nature," as we speak. It occurs 11 times in Leviticus (v. 21 bis, [vi. 2 Eng.] xviii. 20, xix. 11, 15, 17, xxiv. 19, xxv. 14 (bis) 15, 17,) always with the pronominal affix, "thy" or "his;" and always in enjoining things or forbidding things by virtue of our common humanity. Though feminine in form, it is always masc. in fact, as in, "the wife of שֶׁפָּרַד Lev. xviii. 20. and שֶׁפָּרַד, Ib. xix. 17. The word, being revived out of the Pentateuch by Zechariah, received no modification in the Hebrew of the intermediate period.

Luke 12. 32. the land, saith the LORD, two parts therein

And I will turn My hand<sup>1</sup> upon the little ones, doing to them as He had done to the Shepherd. So our Lord forewarned them: <sup>2</sup> If they have persecuted Me they will also persecute you: <sup>3</sup> If the world hate you, ye know that it hated Me, before it hated you: <sup>4</sup> Ye shall be hated of all men for My name's sake: <sup>5</sup> they will deliver you up to the councils and scourge you in the synagogues; and ye shall be brought before governors and kings for My name's sake: <sup>6</sup> they shall deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you: and ye shall be hated of all men for My name's sake; and to the Scribes and Pharisees, <sup>7</sup> I send unto you prophets and wise men and scribes, and some of them ye shall kill and crucify, and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues and persecute them from city to city, that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth.

The little ones<sup>8</sup>, as Jeremias speaks of <sup>9</sup> the least of the flock, and the Lord said, <sup>10</sup> fear not, little flock, little and weak in itself, but mighty in Him and in His grace. Three centuries of persecution, alike in the Roman empire and beyond it in Persia, fulfilled the prophet's words and deepened the foundation of the Church and cemented its fabric.

8. In all the land, two parts therein shall be cut off and die. "In all the land of Israel," says a Jewish interpreter<sup>11</sup>;—the land, in which the Good Shepherd had been slain and the sheep scattered, that upon you, our Lord had said, may come all the righteous blood. As David punished Moab, <sup>12</sup> with two lines measured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive; and Ezekiel prophesied, <sup>13</sup> A third part of thee shall die with the pestilence, and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee; and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee; so now, the greater part should be destroyed, but a remnant should be saved. But the third part shall be left therein. Even so then at this present time also, S. Paul says<sup>14</sup>, there is a remnant according to the election of grace. <sup>15</sup> The third part only shall be saved from the common destruction; yet not so, that they should suppose that glory was to be obtained amid ease."

*9. I will bring the third part through the fire. Such is always God's way. <sup>16</sup> Thou hast proved us, O God; Thou hast tried us, like as silver is tried. adopting the interpretation, adds "i.e. who thinks himself my fellow." R. Isaac (Chizzuk Emonah, Wagenseil Tela Ignea Satanæ p. 310) interprets the whole of the king of Ishmael, called also the king of Turkey, and ruling over Asia and Africa, under whose hand the majority of the people of Israel are in captivity. God calls him my shepherd, because He has given His people into his hand to feed them in their captivity. He calls him 'the man my fellow and companion,' because in the pride and greatness of his heart he accounteth himself like God, like that, Behold man is become like one of us (Gen. iii.). Abarbanel gives, as the one of three interpretations which he prefers, a modification of R. Isaac's, explaining the words "my shepherd" of Mohammed, and directing his interpretation of "the man, my fellow" against our Lord. "The words, 'the man my fellow' are spoken of Jesus the Nazarene, for according to the sentiment of the children of Edom and their faith, he was the Son of God, and of the same substance, and therefore he is called according to their words, 'The man, my fellow.'" Rashi alone has "My shepherd, whom I set over the sheep of my captivity, and the man my fellow whom I associated with myself, to keep my sheep, even as I did;" but "I smite the shepherd," he explains "the wicked king of Moab," or "king of the border of wickedness" [i.e. Edom] or in one MS. "the wicked Roman king, who shepherdeth my flock." R. Tanchum has, "that they think in themselves on account of my setting them over the creation that they

I will bless him and will say, It is My people, "<sup>27</sup> not only by creation as the rest, but by devotion and worship, by predestination and infusion of grace, by singular Providence, by mutual love; and it shall say, The Lord is my God, Whom Alone above all things, I long for, love, worship."

This promise is oftentimes renewed through the prophets, oftentimes fulfilled in Christ, whenever the Church is recalled from listlessness by fiery trials, and through them her children are restored to deeper devotedness and closer union with God.

XIV. "The Jews," S. Jerome says, "say that these things are to be fulfilled under Gog; others that they were accomplished in part, in the times of the Macedonians, Egyptians, and other nations. We, leaving the truth of the time to the judgement of the Lord, would explain what is written." Eusebius<sup>28</sup> points out that it cannot be said to have been fulfilled under Antiochus Epiphanes; "If any think that these things are, then let him consider again and again, whether he can refer the rest of the prophecy also to the times of Antiochus; as, that <sup>29</sup> the feet of the Lord stood on the mount

CHAPTER XIV.

- 1 The destroyers of Jerusalem destroyed. 4 The coming of Christ, and the graces of his kingdom. 12 The plague of Jerusalem's enemies. 16 The remnant shall turn to the Lord, 20 and their spoils shall be holy.

Joel 2. 31.
Acts 2. 20.

BEHOLD, *the day of the LORD cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the

of Olives, that <sup>1</sup>the Lord in that day, became king over the whole earth; and so, as to the rest of the prophecy." And although more was fulfilled in the last siege by the Romans, still those who would explain it solely of this, are obliged to mingle explanations partly literal, as that Jerusalem should be the earthly Jerusalem, which was destroyed, partly metaphorical, as to the mount of Olives, its division into two parts &c. It seems then probable that, like the kindred prophecy of Joel<sup>2</sup>, it relates chiefly to the time of the end, and that as our Lord unites the destruction of Jerusalem with His Coming in the Day of Judgement, so here are united that first destruction with the last rebellion of man, in the times of Anti-Christ. Since then much or most may be yet future, it seems safer, as S. Jerome suggests, to explain the Prophet's symbolic language, leaving the times of the fulfilment to Him, in Whose hands they are.

1. Behold the Day of the Lord cometh, lit. a day cometh, the Lord's, in which He Himself shall be Judge, and no longer leave man to fulfil his own will, and despise God's; in which His glory and holiness and the righteousness of all His ways shall be revealed.

And thy spoil shall be in the midst of thee. "3 How great will the strait be, that the spoils should be divided in the midst of her. It often happens that what, by a sudden assault, is plundered in the city, is divided in the field or in solitude, lest the enemy should come upon them. But now there will be such a heavy weight of ills, such will be the security of conquest, that the spoils shall be divided in the midst of the city."

2. I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle. This is a feature which belongs to the end. It had been dwelt upon by Joel<sup>4</sup>; Ezekiel spoke of the <sup>5</sup>many nations which should come under Gog. S. John foretells of an universal strife at the end, when <sup>6</sup>The spirits of devils, working miracles, go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty; and <sup>7</sup>Satan shall be loosed out of his prison and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle, the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints round about, and the beloved city. Since no creature can do aught but what God wills, and, in his phrenzy against God's people, is but His instrument, <sup>8</sup>to try them and to purge and to make white to the time of the end; and the strength of body or intellect, which is abused against His law, He continuously in the order of nature supplies, God may

2 For <sup>b</sup>I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and <sup>c</sup>the houses rifled, and the <sup>d</sup>women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.

3 Then shall the LORD go forth, and

be said to do what Satan does against Him. Satan, in his blind fury, crowns martyrs, fills the thrones of heaven, works, against his will, the All-wise Will of God.

And the houses rifled, and the women &c. The horrors of heathen war repeat themselves through men's ever-recurring passions. What was foretold as to Babylon is repeated in the same words as to the Church of God. Seemingly all things come alike to all: <sup>9</sup>there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked; to the good and to the clean and to the unclean: to him that sacrificeth and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner. The outward event is the same, the hidden part is known to God Alone. And the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city, unlike the lot of the earthly Jerusalem, in the destruction both by Nebuchadnezzar (which was past) and the Romans<sup>10</sup>. At the first, <sup>11</sup>Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, carried away the rest of the people left in the city, and the fugitives that fell away to the king of Babylon, with the remnant of the multitude, so that Jeremiah mourned over it, <sup>12</sup>Because of the mountain of Zion which is desolate, foxes walk [habitually] upon it. The Romans <sup>13</sup>effaced the city." Now a remnant is not cut off, because <sup>14</sup>for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened; for our Lord had said <sup>15</sup>, that the gates of hell should not prevail against His Church.

3. The Lord shall go forth and shall fight, <sup>16</sup>is to be taken like that in Habakkuk, <sup>17</sup>Thou wentest forth for the salvation of Thy people, for salvation with Thine Anointed, and in Micah, <sup>18</sup>For behold, the Lord cometh forth out of His place, and will come down and will tread upon the high places of the earth, and the mountains shall be molten under Him, and the valleys shall be cleft; and Isaiah also, <sup>19</sup>The Lord shall go forth as a mighty man; He shall stir up jealousy like a man of war; He shall cry; He shall prevail over His enemies. "God is said to go forth, when by some wondrous deed He declares His Presence—His Deity is, as it were, laid up, so long as He holds Himself in, and does not by any token shew His power. But He goes forth, and bursts forth, when He exercises some judgement, and worketh some new work, which striketh terror." God then will go forth out of His place, when He is constrained to break through His quietness and gentleness and clemency, for the amendment of sinners. He Who elsewhere speaketh through the prophet, <sup>20</sup>I, the Lord, change not, and to Whom it is said, <sup>21</sup>Thou art the same, and in the Epistle of James, <sup>22</sup>With Whom is no change, now goeth forth and fighteth as in the day of battle, when He overwhelmed Pharaoh in the Red sea; and fought for Israel." The Lord shall fight for you, became the watchword of Moses<sup>23</sup> fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle.

4 ¶ And his feet shall stand in that day <sup>d</sup> upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof <sup>e</sup> toward the east and toward the west, <sup>e</sup> and

and the warrior Joshua in his old age<sup>1</sup>, after his life's experience<sup>2</sup>, and Nehemiah<sup>3</sup>. Be not afraid by reason of this great multitude, said Jahaziel, son of Zachariah<sup>4</sup>, when the Spirit of the Lord came upon him; for the battle is not your's, but God's.

As He fought in the day of battle. "All wars are so disposed by the power of God, that every victory is to be referred to His counsel and will. But this is not seen so clearly, when men, elate and confident, try to transfer to themselves all or the greater part of the glory of war. Then may the war be eminently said to be the Lord's, when no one drew sword, as it is written, <sup>5</sup> The Lord shall fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace. Of all God's wars, in which human insolence could claim no part of the glory, none was more wondrous than that, in which Pharaoh and his army were sunk in the deep. The Lord, said Moses<sup>6</sup>, is a man of war: the Lord is His Name. That day of battle was the image of one much greater. In that, Pharaoh's army was sunk in the deep; in this, the power of evil, in Hell: in that, what could in some measure be conquered by human strength, was subdued; in this, a tyranny unconquerable; in that, a short-lived liberty was set up; the liberty brought by Christ through subdual of the enemy, is eternal. As then the image yields to the truth, earthly goods to heavenly, things perishable to eternal, so the glory of that ancient victory sinks to nothing under the greatness of the latter."

4. And His feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, "over against Jerusalem to the East, wherein riseth the Sun of Righteousness." The Mount of Olives is the central eminence of a line of hills, of rather more than a mile in length, overhanging the city, from which it is separated only by the narrow bed of the valley of the brook Cedron. It rises 187 feet above Mount Zion, 295 feet above Mount Moriah, 443 feet above Gethsemane, and lies between the city and the wilderness toward the dead sea: around its Northern side, wound the road to Bethany and the Jordan<sup>8</sup>. There, probably, David worshipped<sup>9</sup>; his son, in his decay, profaned it<sup>10</sup>; Josiah desecrated his desecrations<sup>11</sup>; there<sup>12</sup> upon the mountain, which is on the East side of the city, the glory of the Lord stood, when it had gone up from the midst of the city; it united the greatest glory of the Lord on earth, His Ascension, with its deepest sorrow, in Gethsemane. Since the Angel said, <sup>13</sup> This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven, the old traditional opinion is not improbable, that our Lord shall come again to judge the earth, where He left the earth, near the place of His Agony and Crucifixion for us. So shall the Feet of God literally stand upon the Mount of Olives. Else it may be that "the Feet of the uncircumscribed and simple God are to be understood not materially, but that the loving and fixed assistance of His power is expressed by that name."

Which is true, or whether, according to an old opinion, the last act of Anti-Christ shall be an attempt to imitate the Ascension of Christ (as the first Anti-Christ Simon Magus was said to have met his death in some attempt to fly<sup>15</sup>) and be destroyed by His Coming there, the event must shew.

And the Mount of Olives shall cleave [be cleft] in [from] the midst thereof toward the East and toward the West, i.e. the cleft shall be East and West, so as to form a very great valley through it—from Jerusalem toward the Jordan Eastward; and this shall be, in that half of the mountain shall remove Northward, and half thereof Southward. If this be literal, it is to form an actual way of escape from Jerusalem; if figurative, it symbolises how that which would be the greatest hindrance to escape, the mountain which was higher than the city, blocking, as it were, the way, should itself afford the way of escape; as Zechariah speaks, <sup>16</sup> O great mountain, before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain; and Isaiah, <sup>17</sup> Every valley shall be exalted and every mountain and hill shall be brought low, and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain; i.e. every obstacle should be removed.

5. And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains, rather, along <sup>18</sup> the valley of My mountains<sup>19</sup> viz. of those mountains, which God had just formed by dividing the mount of Olives. For the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal, i.e. Azel, the same word which enters into Beth-Azel of Micah, where the allusion probably is to its firm-rootedness. It is more probable that the name of a place should have been chosen with an allusive meaning, as in Micah, than that an unusual appellative should have been chosen to express a very common meaning. S. Cyril had heard of it as the name of a village at the extremity of the mountain<sup>20</sup>. Else it might very probably have been destroyed in the destructive Roman wars. The Roman camp in the last siege must have been very near it<sup>21</sup>. The destruction of villages, after the frantic revolt under Bar-Chocab, was enormous<sup>22</sup>.

Yea, ye shall flee like as ye fled from before the earthquake. An earthquake in the time of Uzziah, whose memory survived the captivity to the time of Zechariah, nearly two centuries, must have been very terrible, but no historical account remains of it, Josephus having apparently described the past earthquake in the language which Zechariah uses of the future<sup>1</sup>. Such an earthquake is the more remarkable a visitation in Jerusalem, because it was out of the line of earthquakes. These were to the North and East of Palestine: within it, they were almost unknown<sup>2</sup>. Interpositions of God even in man's favour, are full of awe and terror. They are tokens of the presence of the All-Holy among the unholy. Fear was an accompaniment of special miracles in the Gospel, not only among the poor Gadarenes<sup>3</sup>, or the people<sup>4</sup>, but even the Apostles<sup>5</sup>; apart from the effect of the sight of Angels on us who are in the flesh<sup>6</sup>. It is then quite compatible, that the valley so formed should be the means of deliverance, and yet an occasion of terror to those delivered through it. The escape of the Christians in Jerusalem to Pella, during the break of the siege, after the withdrawal of Cestius Gallus, was a slight image of this deliverance.

And the Lord thy God shall come, and all the saints with Thee, O God. The prophet, having spoken of God as my God, turns suddenly to speak to Him, as present. <sup>7</sup> This is manifestly said of the second Coming of the Saviour, of which John too in his Apocalypse says, <sup>8</sup> Behold He shall come with the clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him. And the Lord Himself in the Gospel declareth, that <sup>9</sup> the Son of Man shall come in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. He shall come with the clouds, i.e. with the Angels, who are ministering spirits and are sent for different offices, and with the Prophets and Apostles. <sup>10</sup> Whenever Scripture says that the saints and angels come with Christ, it is always speaking of His second Coming, as in that, <sup>11</sup> When the Son of Man shall come in His glory and all His holy Angels with Him, and in the Epistle of Jude<sup>12</sup>, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of His saints, to execute judgement."

6. The light shall not be clear nor dark, or, more probably, according to the original reading<sup>13</sup>, In that day there will be no light; the bright ones<sup>14</sup> will contract themselves, as it is said, <sup>15</sup> The stars shall withdraw their shining.

This is evermore the description of the Day of Judgement, that, in the presence of God Who is Light, all earthly light shall grow pale. So Joel had said, <sup>16</sup> The sun and moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. And Isaiah, <sup>17</sup> The moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed, 7 But || it shall be 'one day' which shall be known to the Lord, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass, that at 'evening' time it shall be light.

when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem and before His ancients gloriously; and, <sup>18</sup> Behold the day of the Lord cometh,—The stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine. All know well our Lord's words<sup>19</sup>. S. John, like Zechariah, unites the failure of the heavenly light <sup>20</sup> with a great earthquake, and the sun became as sackcloth of hair: and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell upon the earth.

7. And it shall be one day: it shall be known unto the Lord: not day, and not night; and at the eventide it shall be light. One special day; one, unlike all besides; known unto God, and to Him Alone. For God Alone knows the day of the consummation of all things, as He saith, <sup>21</sup> Of that day and that hour knoweth no one, neither the angels in Heaven, nor the Son, (so as to reveal it) but the Father only. Neither wholly day, because overclouded with darkness; nor wholly night, for the streaks of light burst through the darkness chequered of both; but in eventide, when all seems ready to sink into the thickest night, there shall be light. Divine light alway breaks in, when all seems darkness; but then the chequered condition of our mortality comes to an end, then comes the morning, which has no evening; the light which has no setting; "perpetual light, brightness infinite;" when <sup>22</sup> the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold; and <sup>23</sup> the glory of God doth lighten the eternal city, and the Lamb is the light thereof; and <sup>24</sup> in Thy light we shall see light. <sup>25</sup> Christ shall be to us eternal light, a long perpetual day."

8. And it shall be, that living waters. <sup>26</sup> This is what is said in the prophecy of Joel, <sup>27</sup> A fountain shall come forth from the house of the Lord; and in that of Ezekiel, <sup>28</sup> And behold there ran out waters." Zechariah leaves to the mind to supply what the former prophets had said of the fertilising life-giving character of those waters. He adds that they should pervade the whole land, West as well as East; to the former, rather the Eastern sea<sup>29</sup>, into which they would by nature flow, and toward the hinder, i.e. the Western sea, the Mediterranean, which natural waters could not reach. This their flow, he adds, should be perpetual. <sup>30</sup> These streams shall not dry

Our version follows this. Abulwalid and Parchon explain it of heavy thick clouds, and make the words synonymous. Tanchum mentions both. The LXX. seem further to have read <sup>31</sup>  $\mu\eta\gamma$ ,  $\kappa\alpha\iota$   $\psi\upsilon\chi\eta$ ; but it is not supported by any MS. or any other version: for the "but" in Symm. Chald. Syr. may only express the contrast of the sentences; "there shall not be light;—and—" as Asyndeton. The LXX. however, "There shall not be light and cold and ice," could only mean to deny the presence of any of them, not (as Ewald) "there shall be no alternation of light with cold and ice." Proph. ii. 62. Light too and cold are not alternatives. The Kri <sup>32</sup>  $\mu\eta\gamma$ , as always, occurs in some MSS., 8 Spanish of De Rossi, 2 at first, 15 old editions. The Jewish authorities (as far as I know) including Abulwalid Tanchum Parchon &c., take no notice of the Kethibh.

the saints, especially when they shall be removed to that holy eternal life in the world to come. For now through faith in Christ we are enriched, as with an earnest, with the first-fruits of the Holy Spirit. But after the Resurrection, sin being wholly taken away, the Holy Spirit will be in us, not as an earnest or in a measure; but richly bounteously and perfectly shall we enjoy the grace through Christ. He calleteth, then, living water, the Spirit which, he says, will come forth from the Jerusalem which is from above.—But that the holy Scripture is wont to liken the Divine Spirit to water, the Giver thereof, the Son, accredits, saying<sup>3</sup>, he that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said, Out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. This the Evangelist explains, <sup>4</sup> This spake He of the Spirit, which they who believe in Him should receive. Since then the Spirit is life-giving, rightly does he liken it to that, which is life-giving to the frame.”

9. And the Lord shall be king over all the earth. Such should be the influence of the living water, i. e. of the Spirit of God. God Who has ever reigned and will reign, <sup>5</sup> a great King over all the earth, shall be owned by His creatures, as what He is.

There shall be one Lord, more exactly, The Lord shall be One, and His Name One. He had before prophesied, <sup>6</sup> I will cut off the names of the idols out of the land. The Church being thus cleansed, no other lord or object of worship should be named but Himself. This is one of those prophecies, of continued expansion and development, ever bursting out and enlarging, yet never, until the end, reaching its full fulfilment. “<sup>7</sup> Since in this life we contemplate God in His effects, in which His whole perfection shineth not forth, now we know Him obscurely and imperfectly, His perfections being in divers diversely represented. In our home we shall

which is now mountains, as is said, <sup>9</sup> *The mountains are round itself shall be exalted<sup>10</sup>, and high above all the earth.” The dignity of the Church, as <sup>11</sup> a city set upon a hill, which cannot be hid, is symbolised here by the sinking of all around and its own uprising; as in Micah and Isaiah, <sup>12</sup> The mountain of the Lord's house shall be established on the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills. Gebah, lit. hill, now Jeva, was a frontier-garrison, held once by the Philistines<sup>13</sup>, and fortified by Asa<sup>14</sup>, in the northern boundary of Benjamin<sup>15</sup>, together with Michmash<sup>16</sup> (now Mûkhmas), commanding an important pass, by which Jerusalem was approached<sup>17</sup>.

Rimmon, south of Jerusalem is mentioned in Joshua among the southern towns of Judah<sup>18</sup>, given to Simeon<sup>19</sup>. Both survived the Captivity<sup>20</sup>. They mark then the N. and S. of the kingdom of Judah, a long mountain chain, which is pictured as sinking down into a plain, that Jerusalem alone might be exalted.

From Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate.
Benjamin's gate<sup>21</sup> must obviously be a gate to the North, and doubtless the same as the gate of Ephraim<sup>22</sup>, the way to Ephraim lying through Benjamin. This too has probably reference to the prophecy of Jeremiah, that <sup>23</sup> the city shall be built to the Lord from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner. <sup>24</sup> Jehoshaphat, king of Israel, brake down the wall of Jerusalem from the gate of Ephraim to the corner-gate, four hundred cubits, after the war with Amaziah.
Zechariah seems to speak of Jerusalem, as it existed in his time. For the tower of Hananeel<sup>25</sup> still existed; the first gate was probably destroyed, since he speaks not of it, but of its place; the gate of Benjamin and the corner-gate probably still existed, since Nehemiah<sup>26</sup> mentions the building of the sheep-gate, the fish-gate, the old gate, or gate of the old city, the valley-gate, the dung-gate, the gate of the fountain; but not these.

11. And they shall dwell in it, in peace, going forth from it, neither into captivity, nor in flight<sup>27</sup>; for God should exempt from curse the city which He had chosen, against which the gates of hell shall not prevail, and He says of the heavenly Jerusalem, <sup>28</sup> there shall be no more curse.

12. Again, upon the restoration of His people follows the destruction of His enemies. It shall, first and chiefly, be God's doing, not man's. This shall be the plague. The word

14. And Judah also shall fight at Jerusalem. This seems more probable than the alternative rendering of the E.M., "against." For Judah is united with Jerusalem as one, in the same context<sup>16</sup>; and, if it had shared with the heathen, it must also have shared their lot. It is Judah itself, not "a remnant of Judah," as it is <sup>17</sup> every one that is left of all the nations, which is thus united to Jerusalem: it is that same Judah, as a whole, of which it is said, it shall fight. Nor is anything spoken of "conversion," which is said of those left from the heathen nations, who had fought against her. Yet for Judah to have joined an exterminating Heathen war against Jerusalem, even though constrained, had, like the constrained sacrifices to Heathen gods, been apostasy. But there is not even a hint that, as Jonathan apologetically paraphrases<sup>18</sup>, they were "constrained." The war is to be Judah's free act: Judah also shall fight. Again, those gathered against Jerusalem, and their warfare against it, had been described at the outset, as <sup>19</sup> all nations: here the subject is not the gathering or fighting, but the overthrow. Nor is there any decisive contrary idiom; for, although when used of people, it always means "fight against," yet, of place, it, as often, means "fight in"<sup>20</sup>. Probably then the Prophet means, that not only should God fight for His people, but that Judah also should do its part, as S. Paul says, <sup>21</sup> We, then, as workers together with Him; and, <sup>22</sup> we are labourers together with God; and, <sup>23</sup> I laboured more abundantly than they all; yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me; or, <sup>24</sup> work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure. God so doth all things in the Church, for the conversion of the heathen, and for single souls, as to wait for the coöperation of His creature. <sup>25</sup> God made thee without thee; He doth not justify thee without thee."

the Church shall be abundantly repaid. All the heathen had combined to plunder Jerusalem <sup>1</sup>; the wealth of all the heathen shall be gathered to requite them. “<sup>2</sup> As Isaiah says, The nations, converted to Christ, brought all their wealth to the Church, whence he congratulates the Church, saying, “<sup>3</sup> Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles, and shalt suck the breasts of kings—For brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver; under which he typically understands, “<sup>4</sup> wisdom, philosophy, eloquence, learning, and all the other arts and sciences, liberal and mechanical, wherewith the heathen shall be adorned, who are converted to the faith. So shall the gifts of nature be perfected by the gifts of grace, and they shall defend the Church who erstwhile attacked it.”

15. And so shall be the plague of the horse &c. “<sup>4</sup> So, when God sendeth the plague, all the irrational animals of Anti-Christ and his satellites shall perish, as the aforesaid men, who used them, perished. For, for the sins of men, God, to their greater confusion, sometimes slays their beasts, sometimes also for their loving correction.” “<sup>5</sup> The imagery is from the Mosaic law of the ban. If a whole city became guilty of idolatry, not the inhabitants only, but the beasts were to be destroyed <sup>6</sup>, so that here, in miniature, should be repeated the relation of the irrational to the rational part of the creation, according to which, for the sins of men, the creature is, against its will, made subject to vanity. Analogous is it also, that on the offence of Achan <sup>7</sup>, beside him and his children, his oxen, asses and sheep were [stoned and] burned with him.”

16. Every one that is left of the nations. God so gives the repentance, even through His visitations, that, in proportion to the largeness of the rebellion and the visitation upon it, shall be the largeness of the conversion. “<sup>8</sup> Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled. And S. Paul, “<sup>9</sup> Blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles shall be come in; and so all Israel shall be saved. Hitherto prophets had spoken of a <sup>10</sup> remnant of Jacob, who should return to the mighty God, and should be saved; now, upon this universal rebellion of the heathen, He foretells the conversion of a remnant of the heathen also.

Shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts. There is a harmony between the rebellion and the repentance. The converted shall go to worship God there, where they had striven to exterminate His worshippers. The prophet could only speak of the Gospel under the image of the law. The Feast of Tabernacles has its counterpart, not, like the Pascha or the Pentecost, in any single feast, but in the whole life of the Gospel. It was a thanksgiving for past deliverance; it was a picture of their pilgrim-life from the passage of the Red sea, until the parting of the Jordan opened to them the entrance to their temporary rest in Canaan <sup>11</sup>. “<sup>12</sup> In that vast, wide, terrible wilderness, where was no village, house, town, cave, it made itself tents, wherein to sojourn with wives and children, avoiding by day the burning sun, by night damp and cold and hurt from dew; and it was <sup>13</sup> a statute for ever in their generations; ye shall dwell in booths seven days; all, that are Israelites born, shall dwell in booths, that your generations may know, that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt.” “<sup>2</sup> Much more truly do Christians keep the feast of tabernacles, not once in the year only, but continually, unceasingly. This is, what S. Peter admonisheth, “<sup>14</sup> Dearly beloved, I beseech you, as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts. And S. Paul often teacheth that we, like Abraham, are strangers on earth, but <sup>15</sup> citizens of heaven with the saints, and of the household of God. Faith, he says, <sup>16</sup> is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. By faith Abraham sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise; for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.” “<sup>12</sup> As long as we are in progress, in the course and militant, we dwell in tabernacles, striving with all our mind to pass from the tabernacles to the firm and lasting dwelling-place of the house of God. Whence also holy David said, “<sup>17</sup> I am a stranger with Thee and a sojourner, as all my fathers were. So speaketh he, who is still in Egypt and yet placed in the world. But he who goeth forth out of Egypt, and entereth a desert from vices, holdeth his way and says in the Psalm, “<sup>18</sup> I will pass through to the place of the tabernacle of the Wonderful unto the house of God. Whence also he says elsewhere, “<sup>19</sup> How amiable are Thy dwellings, Thou Lord of hosts; my soul longeth, yea even fainteth for the courts of the Lord; and a little after, “<sup>20</sup> Blessed are they who dwell in thy house, they shall be alway praising Thee. “<sup>21</sup> The voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous. “<sup>22</sup> One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to enquire in His temple. Whoso dwelleth in such tabernacles, and hastes to go from the tabernacles to the court, and from the court to the house, and from the house to the temple of the Lord, ought to celebrate the feast of Tabernacles &c.” It symbolises how, “<sup>4</sup> in the New Testament, Christians, being delivered through Christ from the slavery to sin and satan, and sojourning in this vale of misery, by making progress in virtues go up to the home of the heavenly paradise, the door of glory being open by the merit of the Lord’s Passion, and so the faithful of Christ celebrate the feast of tabernacles; and, after the destruction of Anti-Christ, they will celebrate it the more devoutly, as there will then be among them a fuller fervour of faith.”

endure. For enemies, and they who will not love, shall have the same lot. This is, I think, what Christ Himself said, <sup>1</sup>Whoso is not with Me is against Me, and whoso gathereth not with Me scattereth."

Upon them there shall be no rain. Rain was the most essential of God's temporal gifts for the temporal well-being of His people. Moses marked out this, as his people were entering on the promised land, with recent memory of Egypt's independence of rain in Egypt itself, and that this gift depended on obedience. <sup>2</sup>The land, whither thou goest in to possess it, is not as the land of Egypt, whence ye came out, where thou sowedst thy seed and wateredst it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs: but a land of hills and valleys,—it drinketh water of the rain of heaven; a land which the LORD thy God careth for; the eyes of the LORD are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year. And it shall be, if ye shall hearken diligently unto My commandments—I will give you the rain of your land in its season, the first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn and thy wine and thine oil. And I will send grass in thy fields for thy cattle, that thou mayest eat and be full. But the threat on disobedience corresponded therewith. <sup>3</sup>Take heed to yourselves, Moses continues, that your heart be not deceived, and ye turn aside and serve other gods—and the LORD's wrath be kindled against you, and He shut up the heaven, that there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit, and ye perish quickly from off the good land, which the LORD giveth you; and, <sup>4</sup>Thy heaven, that is over thee, shall be brass, and the earth, that is under thee, shall be iron; the LORD shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust. Amos speaks of the withdrawal of rain as one of God's chastisements<sup>5</sup>: the distress in the time of Ahab is pictured in the history of the woman of Sarepta<sup>6</sup>, and Ahab's directions to Obadiah<sup>7</sup>. But it is also the symbol of spiritual blessings; both are united by Hosca<sup>8</sup> and Joel<sup>9</sup>, as Joel and Amos also speak of spiritual blessings exclusively under the figure of temporal abundance<sup>10</sup>. In Isaiah it is simply a symbol, <sup>11</sup>Drop down, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness; let the earth open, and let them bring forth salvation, and let righteousness spring up together.

18. And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, that have no rain; rather, and there shall not be<sup>12</sup>. It may be that the prophet chose this elliptical form, as well knowing that the symbol did not hold as to Egypt, which, however it ultimately depended on the equatorial rains which overfilled the lakes which supply the Nile, did not need that fine arrangement of the rains of Autumn and Spring which were essential to the fruitfulness of Palestine. The omission leaves room for the somewhat prosaic supply of Jonathan, "The Nile shall not ascend to them." More probably the words are left undefined with a purposed abruptness, there shall not be upon them, viz. whatever they need: the omission of the symbol in these two verses might the more suggest, that it is a symbol only. Egypt, the ancient oppressor of Israel, is united with Judah as one, in the same worship of God, as Isaiah had said, <sup>13</sup>In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria; and since it is united in the duty, so also in the punishment for despising it.

<sup>14</sup>Let not Egypt be proud, that it is watered by the Nile, as if it needed no rain: i. e. let no one be secure in this life. For though we stand by faith, yet may we fall. For although bedewed by the efflux of Divine grace, and filled with its richness, yet if we give not thanks continually for such great gifts, God will count us as the rest, to whom such copious goodness never came. The safety of all then lies in this, that while we are in these tabernacles, we cherish the Divine benefits, and unceasingly praise the Lord, Who hath heaped such benefits upon us."

<sup>15</sup>Under the one nation of the Egyptians, he understands those who are greatly deceived, and choose idolatry most unreasonably, to whom it will be a grave inevitable judgement, the pledge of destruction, that they despise the acceptable grace of salvation through Christ. For they are murderers of their own souls, if, when they could lay hold of eternal life and the Divine gentleness, open to all who will choose it and put off the burden of sin, they die in their errors: the stain and pollution from transgression and error uncleansed, although the Divine light illumined all around and called those in darkness to receive sight. Of each of these I would say, <sup>16</sup>Better is an untimely birth than he; for he cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness. <sup>17</sup>Good had it been for them, if they had never been born, is the Saviour's word. That this is not said of the Egyptians only, but shall come true of all nations, who shall altogether be punished, if they are reckless of the salvation through Christ and honour not His festival, he will establish in these words;

19. This shall be the sin of Egypt and the sin of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. For before the coming of the Saviour, good perhaps had been in part the excuse of the heathen, that they had been called by none. For no one had preached unto them. Wherefore the Saviour also, pointing out this in the Gospel parables, said, <sup>18</sup>the labourers, called at the eleventh hour, said, No man hath hired us. But when Christ cast His light upon us, <sup>19</sup>bound the strong man, removed from his perverseness those subject to him, justified by faith those who came to Him, laid down His life for the life of all, they will find no sufficient excuse who admit not so reverend a grace. It will be true of the heathen too, if Christ said of them, <sup>20</sup>If I had not come and upon them," viz. rain at any time; but it is unnatural that, in two consecutive verses, the words should be taken in such divergent senses. The omission of <sup>21</sup>by the LXX., followed so far (as so often) by the Pesh., is supported only by 4 Kenn. MSS., against those in S. Jerome's time, and Symm. Theod. Jon., and is evidently a makeshift, followed by Ewald.

spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloke for their sin."

The prophet says sin, not punishment<sup>1</sup>, for sin includes the punishment, which is its due, and which it entails: it does not express the punishment, apart from the sin. It was the sin which comprised and involved all other sin, the refusal to worship God as He had revealed Himself, and to turn to Him. It was to say, <sup>2</sup>We will not have Him to reign over us.

20. In that day there shall be upon the bells<sup>3</sup> of the horses, Holiness unto the Lord. He does not say only, that they should be consecrated to God, as Isaiah says of Tyre, <sup>4</sup>Her merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the Lord; he says that, the bells of the horses, things simply secular, should bear the same inscription as the plate on the high priest's forehead. Perhaps the comparison was suggested by the bells on the high priest's dress<sup>5</sup>; not the lamina only on his forehead, but bells (not as his, which were part of his sacred dress), bells, altogether secular, should be inscribed with the self-same title, whereby he himself was dedicated to God.

Holiness to the Lord. He does not bring down what is sacred to a level with common things, but he uplifts ordinary things, that they too should be sacred, as S. Paul says, <sup>6</sup>whether ye eat or drink or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.

And the pots of the Lord's house shall be like bowls before the altar. The pots are mentioned, together with other vessels of the Lord's house<sup>7</sup>, but not in regard to any sacred use. They were used, with other vessels, for dressing the victims<sup>8</sup> for the partakers of the sacrifices. These were to be sacred, like those made for the most sacred use of all, the bowls for sprinkling<sup>9</sup>, whence that sacrificial blood was taken, which was to make the typical atonement.

21. And every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness to the Lord. Everything is to be advanced in holiness. All the common utensils everywhere in the people of God shall not only be holy, but holiness, and capable of the same use as the vessels of the temple.

ceased to be; the Gibeonites, the last remnant of them, had been absorbed among the people of God. But all Israel were not of Israel. Isaiah had called its princes and people, <sup>10</sup>rulers of Sodom, people of Gomorrah. Ezekiel had said, <sup>11</sup>Thus saith the Lord God unto Jerusalem; Thy birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother a Hittite. Hosca used at least the term of two-fold meaning, <sup>12</sup>Canaan, in whose hands are the balances of deceit; and Zephaniah, <sup>13</sup>All the people of Canaan are destroyed. After the time of the Canon, Daniel is introduced saying, <sup>14</sup>O thou seed of Canaan and not of Judah. Ezekiel had spoken of ungodly priests, not only as uncircumcised in heart (according to the language of Deuteronomy<sup>15</sup>), but uncircumcised in flesh also, altogether alien from the people of God<sup>16</sup>. The prophet then speaks, as Isaiah, <sup>17</sup>It shall be called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it, and Joel, <sup>18</sup>then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more. This shall have its full fulfilment in the time of the end. <sup>19</sup>There shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or a lie; and, without are dogs and sorcerers and whoremongers and murderers and idolaters, and whatsoever loveth and maketh a lie.

<sup>20</sup>Although born of the blood of Israel, those of old eagerly imitated the alien Canaanites. But after that the Only-Begotten Word of God came among us, and, having justified by faith, sealed with the Holy Spirit, those who came to His grace, our mind hath been steadfast, unshaken, fixed in piety. Nor will any one persuade those who are sanctified, to honour any other god save Him Who is, by nature and in truth, God, Whom we have known in Christ. For in Himself He hath shewn us the Father, saying, <sup>21</sup>He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father. Wherefore in that day, i. e. at that time, he says, there shall be no Canaanite, i. e. alien and idolater, in the house of the Lord Almighty. <sup>22</sup>But may the Almighty God bring the saying true at this time also, that no Canaanite should be seen among us, but that all should live according to the Gospel-laws, and await that blessed hope and the appearance of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ, with Whom be glory to the Father with the Holy Ghost, now and ever and to endless ages. Amen."

"trappings of horses" [Jon.] or "warlike ornaments" (S. Jerome's Jewish teacher) have none; the עָוֹן of Aq. and περίπλετον ὄσκιον of Symm. (as from נִיִּץ) give no meaning.

TO

THE PROPHET MALACHI.

THE last prophet of the Old Testament, like the Forerunner of our Lord, whom he foreannounced under his own name, "the messenger of the Lord," willed to be but "the voice of one crying in the wilderness;" as his great successor, who took up his message, when asked, Who art thou? What sayest thou of thyself? said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord. He mentions neither his parentage, nor birthplace, nor date; nor did he add the name of his office<sup>c</sup>, and has left it to be guessed, whether the name under which he is known, was the name which he bore among men; so wholly did he will to be hidden. No one before him is recorded to have borne his name. It may be that he framed it for himself, and willed to be known only as what it designated, "the messenger of the Lord." This was a favourite title with him, since, in this brief prophecy, he uses it, as describing the priest's office, and that of the forerunner<sup>d</sup>; whereas, before him, except once by Haggai and once by Isaiah<sup>e</sup>, it had been used only of the blessed Angels.

There is, however, no ground to think that it was not his name. Even the Seventy, who paraphrase it, "His messenger," prefix to the book the name Malachi; and the title, "my messenger," would not have described that he was "the messenger of God," since the name of God had not preceded. "If names are to be interpreted," S. Jerome says, "and history is to be framed from them, not a spiritual meaning to be derived, then Hosca who is called Saviour, and Joel whose name means, 'Lord God,' and the other prophets will not be men, but rather angels or the Lord and Saviour, according to the meaning of their name." No special stress was laid upon the name, even by the Origenists, who supposed Haggai Malachi and S. John Baptist to have been angels<sup>f</sup>. Origen himself supposed S. John Baptist to have been an angel in human form<sup>g</sup>, and Melchisedek<sup>h</sup>, as well as Malachi. More widely, that "they became the words in the prophets."

At the time of our Lord, some accounted him to have been Ezra, perhaps for his zeal for the law. His date must, however, have been later, since there is no mention of the building of the temple, whose service was in its regular order. In the New Testament, like others of the twelve, he is cited without his name<sup>k</sup>, or the substance of his prophecy, is spoken

Yet he probably bore a great part in the reformation, in which Nehemiah coöperated outwardly, and to effect which, after he had, on the expiring of his 12 years of office<sup>m</sup>, returned to Persia, he obtained leave to visit his own land again<sup>n</sup>, apparently for a short time. For he mentions his obtaining that leave, in connection with abuses at Jerusalem, which had taken place in his absence, and which he began reforming, forthwith on his arrival. But three chief abuses, the neglect of God's service, the defilement of the priesthood and of their covenant, and the cruelty to their own Jewish wives, divorcing them to make way for idolatresses, are subjects of Malachi's reproofs. Nehemiah found these practices apparently rampant. It is not then probable that they had been, before, the subjects of Malachi's denunciation, nor were his own energetic measures probably fruitless, so that there should be occasion for these denunciations afterwards. It remains, then, as the most probable, that Malachi, as the prophet, coöperated with Nehemiah, as the civil authority, as Haggai and Zechariah had with Zerubbabel. "So Isaiah coöperated with Hezekiah; Jeremiah with Josiah. Of a mere external reformation there is no instance" in Jewish history.

It does not appear, whether Nehemiah, on his return, was invested by the king of Persia with extraordinary authority for these reforms, or whether he was appointed as their governor. The brief account affords no scope for the mention of it. It is not then any objection to the contemporaneousness of Malachi and Nehemiah, that, whereas Nehemiah, while governor, required not the bread of the governor, i. e. the allowance granted him by the Persian government, as an impost upon the people, Malachi upbraids the people that they would not offer to their governor the poor things which they offered to Almighty God, or that the governor would not accept it, in that it would be an insult rather than an act of respect. For 1) the question in Malachi is of a free-offering, not of an impost; 2) Nehemiah says that he did not require it, not that he would not accept it; 3) there is no evidence that he was now governor, nor 4) any reason why he should not accept in their improved condition, what he did not require, because the bondage was heavy upon this people. Pre-

Like S. John Baptist, though afar off, he prepared the way of the Lord by the preaching of repentance. More than other prophets, he unveils priests and people to themselves, interprets their thoughts to them, and puts those thoughts in abrupt naked language, picturing them as demurring to every charge which he brought against them. They were not, doubtless, conscious hypocrites. For conscious hypocrisy is the sin of individuals, aping the graces which others possess and which they have not, yet wish to be held in estimation for having. Here, it is the mass which is corrupt. The true Israel are the exception; <sup>a</sup> those who feared the Lord, the jewels of Almighty God. It is the hypocrisy of self-deceit, contented with poor, limited, outward service, and pluming itself upon it. Malachi unfolds to them the meaning of their acts. His thesis is themselves, whom he unfolds to them. He interprets himself, putting into their mouths words, betokening a simple unconsciousness either of God's goodness or their own evil. <sup>b</sup> Yet ye say, Wherein hast Thou loved us? This was their inward thought, as it is the thought of all, ungrateful to God. But his characteristic is, that he puts these thoughts into abrupt, bold bad words, which might startle them for their hideousness, as if he would say, "This is what your acts mean." He exhibits the worm and the decay, which lay under the whited exterior. <sup>c</sup> Ye say, Wherein have we despised Thy Name? Perhaps, they were already learning, not to pronounce the proper Name of God, while they caused it to be despised. Or they pronounced it with reverent pause, while they shewed that they held cheap God and His service. <sup>d</sup> Ye say, The table of the Lord is contemptible. <sup>e</sup> Ye say, the table of the Lord is polluted; and the fruit thereof, his meat, is contemptible. Their acts said it. What a reading of thoughts! <sup>f</sup> Ye said also, Behold, what a weariness! It is the language of the heart in all indevotion. <sup>g</sup> Ye say, Wherefore? as if innocently unconscious of the ground of God's judgement. <sup>h</sup> Wherein have we robbed Thee? The language of those who count the earth as their own. <sup>i</sup> Ye say, Wherein have we wearied Him? <sup>j</sup> When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and in them doth He delight, or, Where is the God of judgement? The heart's speech in all envy at the prosperity of the wicked!

Yet the object of all this unfolding them to themselves, is their repentance. We have already the self-righteousness of the Pharisees, and the Sadducees' denial of God's Providence. And we have already the voice of S. John Baptist, of the wrath to come. They professed to <sup>k</sup> delight in the coming of the messenger of the covenant; yet their deeds were such as would be burned up with the fire of His Coming, not, rewarded.

Pharisees and Sadducees are but two offshoots of the same ungodliness; Pharisees, while they hoped by outward acts to be in favour with God, they become, at least, secret Sadducees, when the hope fails. First, they justify themselves. God had said to them, <sup>l</sup> Ye are departed out of the way: I have made you base, as ye have not kept My ways. They say <sup>m</sup>, It is vain to serve God; and what profit, that we have kept His ordinance? (affirming that they had done, what God called them to repentance for not doing). God said <sup>n</sup>, Ye have covered the altar of the Lord with tears, the tears of their wronged wives; they insist on their own austerities, <sup>o</sup> we have walked mournfully before the Lord our God. Then comes the Sadducee portion. God had called them to obedience and said, <sup>p</sup> Prove Me now herewith: they say, The workers of wickedness have proved God, and are saved. God promised, <sup>q</sup> All nations shall call you blessed; they answer, and now we call the proud blessed. What have we spoken against Thee? is the last self-justifying question, which Malachi records of them; and this, while reproaching God for the uselessness of serving Him, and choosing the lot of those who rejected Him.

Thereon Malachi abandons this class to their own blindness. There was hope amid any sin, however it rebelled against God. This was a final denial of God's Providence and rejection of Himself. So Malachi closes with the same prophecy, with which S. John Baptist prepared our Lord's coming, His fan is in His hand, and He will thoroughly purge His floor, and will gather the wheat into His garner, but the chaff He shall burn with fire unquenchable. The unspeakable tenderness of God towards those who fear His name, and the severity to those who finally rebel, are perhaps nowhere more vividly declared, than in these closing words of the Old Testament. Yet the love of God, as ever, predominates; and the last prophet closes with the word "Remember," and with one more effort to avert the curse which they were bringing upon themselves. Yet no prophet declares more expressly the rejection of the people, to whom he came to minister, the calling of the Gentiles, the universal worship, in all the earth, of Him Who was hitherto worshipped by the Jews only; and that, not at Jerusalem, but each offering, in his own place, the sacrifice which hitherto (as they had recently experienced, in their captivity at Babylon) could be offered up in Jerusalem only. To him alone it was reserved unto God in every place throughout the world from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. It has been said, "Malachi is like a late evening, which closes a long day, but he is at the same time the morning twilight which bears in its bosom a glorious day."

"When Prophecy was to be withdrawn from the ancient Church of God, its last light was mingled with the rising beams of the Sun of Righteousness. In one view it combined a retrospect of the Law with the clearest specific signs of the Gospel advent. <sup>r</sup> Remember ye the law of Moses My servant, which I commanded him in Horeb, for all Israel, with the statutes and the judgements. Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet, before the great and dreadful day of the Lord. Prophecy had been the oracle of Judaism and of Christianity, to uphold the authority of the one, and reveal the promise of the other. And now its latest admonitions were like those of a faithful departing minister, embracing and summing up his duties. Resigning its charge to the personal Precursor of Christ, it expired with the Gospel upon its lips."

A school, which regards the "prophets" chiefly as "poets," says that "the language is prosaic, and manifests the decaying spirit of prophecy." The office of the prophets was, to convey in forceful words, which God gave them, His message to His people. The poetic form was but an accident. God, Who knows the hearts of His creatures whom He has made, knows better than we, why He chose such an instrument. Zechariah, full of imagination, He chose some years before. But He preserved in history the account of the words which Zechariah spoke, not the words wherewith he urged the rebuilding of the temple, in his own book. Had Malachi spoken in imaginative language, like that of Ezekiel, to whom God says, "thou art unto them like a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice and can play well on an instrument, and they hear thy words and they do them not," it may be that they would have acted then, as they did in the time of Ezekiel. It may be, that times like those of Malachi, apathetic, self-justifying, murmuring, self-complacent, needed a sterner, abrufter, more startling voice to awaken them. Wisdom was justified of her children. God wrought by him a reformation for the time being: He gave through him a warning to the generation, when our Lord should come, that He should come, as their Judge as well as their Saviour, and, how they should stand in the day of His Coming. He gave it as a book to His whole Church, whereby to distinguish seeming from real service. Parting words are always solemn, as closing the past, and opening out a future of expectation before us. The position of Malachi, as the last of the prophets, bids us the more solemnly prepare for that dread Day, our Lord's Second Coming, which he foretold, in one with the First, warning us that we deceive not ourselves, in unconsciousness of our own evil and remembrance of our seeming good, until He profess unto us, "I never knew you; depart from Me, ye that work iniquity."

THE burden of the word of the LORD to Israel † by Malachi.

2 "I have loved you, saith the LORD.

CHAP. I. 1. The burden of the word of the Lord to Israel. <sup>a</sup>"The word of the Lord is heavy, because it is called a burden, yet it hath something of consolation, because it is not 'against,' but to Israel. For it is one thing when we write to this or that person; another, when we write 'against' this or that person; the one being the part of friendship, the other, the open admission of enmity."

By the hand of Malachi; through him, as the instrument of God, deposited with him; as S. Paul speaks of <sup>2</sup>the dispensation of the Gospel, <sup>3</sup>the word of reconciliation, <sup>4</sup>the Gospel of the uncircumcision, being committed to him.

2. I have loved you, saith the Lord. What a volume of God's relations to us in two simple words, I-have-loved you<sup>b</sup>. So would not God speak, unless He still loved. "I have loved and do love you," is the force of the words. When? and since when? In all eternity God loved; in all our past, God loved. Tokens of His love, past or present, in good or seeming ill, are but an effluence of that everlasting love. He, the Unchangeable, ever loved, as the Apostle of love says; <sup>6</sup>we love Him, because He first loved us. The deliverance from the bondage of Egypt, the making them His <sup>7</sup>peculiar people, the adoption, the covenant, the giving of the law, the service of God and His promises, all the several mercies involved in these, the feeding with manna, the deliverance from their enemies whenever they returned to Him, their recent restoration, the gift of the prophets, were so many single pulses of God's everlasting love, uniform in itself, manifold in its manifestations. But it is more than a declaration of His everlasting love. "I have loved you;" God would say; with <sup>8</sup>a special love, a more than ordinary love, with greater tokens of love, than to others." So God brings to the penitent soul the thought of its ingratitude: I have loved you: I, you.

And ye have said, Wherein hast Thou loved us? It is a characteristic of Malachi to exhibit in all its nakedness man's ingratitude. This is the one voice of all men's murmurings, ignoring all God's past and present mercies, in view of the one thing which He withholds, though they dare not put it into words: Wherein hast Thou loved us? <sup>9</sup>Within a while they forgot His works, and the wonders that He had shewed them: <sup>10</sup>they made haste, they forgot His works.

Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord: and I loved Jacob, and Esau have I hated. <sup>11</sup>While they were yet in their mother's womb, before any good or evil deserts of either, God said to their mother, <sup>12</sup>The elder shall serve the younger. The hatred was not a proper and formed hatred, (for God could not hate Esau before he sinned) but only a lesser love, which, in comparison to the great love for Jacob, seemed as if it were not love. <sup>13</sup>So he says, <sup>14</sup>The Lord saw that Leah was hated; where Jacob's neglect of Leah, and lesser love than for Rachel, is called 'hatred'; yet Jacob did not literally hate Leah, whom he loved and cared for as his wife." This greater love was shewn in preferring the Jews to the Edomites, giving to the Jews His law, Church, temple, prophets, and subjecting Edom to them; and especially in the recent deliverance. <sup>15</sup>He does not speak directly of predestination, but of prælection to temporal goods." God gave both nations alike over to the Chaldees for the punishment of their sins; but the Jews He brought back, Edom He left unrestored.

3. And I made his mountains a waste, and his heritage for the jackals<sup>14</sup> of the wilderness. Malachi attests the first stage of fulfilment of Joel's prophecy, <sup>15</sup>Edom shall be a desolate wilderness. In temporal things, Esau's blessing was identical with Jacob's; the fatness of the earth and of the dew of heaven from above; and the rich soil on the terraces of its mountain-sides, though yielding nothing now except a wild beautiful vegetation, and its deep glens, attest what they once must have been, when artificially watered and cultivated. The first desolation must have been through Nebuchadnezzar<sup>1</sup> in his expedition against Egypt, when he subdued Moab and Ammon; and Edom lay in his way, as Jeremiah had foretold<sup>2</sup>.

4. Whereas Edom saith<sup>3</sup>, We are impoverished<sup>4</sup>, or, more probably, we were crushed. Either gives an adequate sense. Human self-confidence will admit anything, as to the past; nay, will even exaggerate past evil to itself, "Crush us how they may, we will arise and repair our losses." So Ephraim said of old, "<sup>5</sup>in the pride and stoutness of heart, The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn-stones: the sycomores are cut down, but we will change them into cedars. It is the one language of what calls itself, "indomitable;" in other words, "untameable," conquerors or every other gambler; "we will repair our losses." All is again staked and lost.

5. And your eyes shall see. Malicious pleasure in looking on at the misery of Judæa and Jerusalem, had been a special sin of Edom: now God would shew Judah the fruit of its reversal, and His goodness towards themselves. "<sup>12</sup>Ye have assurance of His love towards you and providence over you, when ye see that ye are returned to your own land, and can inhabit it, but they cannot do this: but they build and I throw down, and ye therefore praise and magnify My name for this, and ye shall say, The Lord shall be magnified on the border of Israel, i.e. His greatness shall be always manifest upon you;" high above and exalted over the border of Israel<sup>13</sup>, which shall retain its name, while Edom shall have ceased to be. Wickedness gives its name to Edom's border, as in Zechariah's vision it was removed and settled in Babylon<sup>14</sup>.

6. A son honoureth his father, and a slave his lord. Having spoken of the love of God, he turns to the thanklessness of man. God appeals to the first feelings of the human heart, the relation of parent and child, or, failing this, to the natural self-interest of those dependent on their fellow-men. A son by the instinct of nature, by the unwritten law written in the heart, honoureth his father. If he fail to do so, he is counted to have broken the law of nature, to be an unnatural son. If he is, what by nature he ought to be, he does really honour him. He does not even speak of love, as to which they might deceive themselves. He speaks of honour, outward reverence only; which whoso sheweth not, would openly condemn himself as an unnatural son, a bad slave. "Of course," the Jews would say, "children honour parents, and slaves their masters, but what is that to us?" God turns to them their own mental admission,

If I am a Father. "<sup>15</sup>Although, before ye were born, I began to love you in Jacob as sons, yet choose by what title ye will name Me: I am either your Father or your Lord. If a Father, render me the honour due to a father, and offer the piety worthy of a parent. If a Lord, why despise ye Me? why fear ye not your Lord?" God was their Father by creation, as He is Father of all, as Creator of all. He had come to be their Father in a nearer way, by temporal redemption and adoption as His peculiar people, creating them to be a nation to His glory. This they were taught to confess in their psalmody, <sup>16</sup>He hath made us, and not we ourselves; we are His people and the sheep of His pasture. This title God had given them in sight of the Egyptians, <sup>17</sup>Israel is My son, My firstborn: of this Hosea reminded them; <sup>18</sup>When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called My son out of Egypt; and Jeremiah reassured them, <sup>19</sup>I am a Father to Israel and Ephraim is My first-born: this, Isaiah had pleaded to God; <sup>20</sup>Doubtless Thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not. Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer, Thy name is from everlasting. <sup>21</sup>And now, O Lord, Thou art our Father; we the clay, and Thou our potter; and we all, the work of Thy hands. God had impressed this His relation of Father, in Moses' prophetic warning; <sup>22</sup>Do ye thus requite the Lord, O foolish people and unwise? Is not He thy Father that hath bought thee? hath He not made thee and established thee? "<sup>23</sup>God is the Father of the faithful; 1) by creation; 2) by preservation and governance; 3) by alimony; 4) by fatherly care and providence; 5) by faith and grace, whereby He justifies and adopts us as sons and heirs of His kingdom."

our Father; but, by disobedience, we in deeds deny it. Our life denies what we in words profess. Where is My honour? "1 Why obey ye not My precepts, nor honour Me with acts of adoration; praying, praising, giving thanks, sacrificing, and reverently fulfilling every work of God? For 2 cursed is he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully."

And if I am your Lord, "as I certainly am, and specially by singular providence." "3 He is our Lord by the same titles, that He is our Father, and by others, as that He has redeemed us, and purchased us to Himself by the Blood of His Son; that He is the Supreme Majesty, Whom all creation is bound to serve; that, setting before us the reward of eternal glory, He has hired us as servants and labourers into His vineyard." God Alone is Lord through universal sovereignty, underived authority, and original source of laws, precepts, rights; and all other lords are but as ministers and instruments, compared to Him, the Lord and original Doer of all. Hence He says, 4 I am the Lord; that is My Name, and My glory will I not give to another."

Where is My fear? which ought to be shewn Me. "5 If thou art a servant, render to the Lord the service of fear; if a son, shew to thy Father the feeling of piety. But thou renderest not thanks, neither lovest nor fearest God. Thou art then either a contumacious servant or a proud son." "3 Fear includes reverence, adoration, sacrifice, the whole worship of God." "6 Whoso feareth is not over-curious, but adores; is not inquisitive, but praises, and glorifies."

"1 Fear is twofold; servile, whereby punishment, not fault, is dreaded; filial, by which fault is feared. In like way service is twofold. A servant with a service of fear, purely servile, does not deserve to be called a son of God, nor is in a state of salvation, not having love. Whence Christ, distinguishing such a servant from a son of God by adoption, saith, 7 The servant abideth not in the house for ever, but the son abideth ever: and again, 8 The servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth. But a servant, whose service is of pure and filial love, is also a son, of whom the Saviour saith, 9 Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. But since a distinction is made here between the son and the servant, he seems to be speaking of servile fear, which, although it doth not good well and meritoriously, i. e. with a right intention and from love, yet withdraws from ill, and is the beginning of wisdom, because it disposeth to grace. Whence it is written, 10 The fear of the Lord driveth away sins, and again Scripture saith, 11 By the fear of the Lord men depart from evil."

"12 God requireth to be feared as a Lord, honoured as a Father, loved as a Husband. Which is chiefest of these? Love. Without this, fear has torment, honour has no grace. Fear, when not enfreed by love, is servile. Honour, which cometh not from love, is not honour, but adulation. Honour and glory belong to God Alone; but neither of them will God accept, unless seasoned with the honey of love."

Saith the Lord unto you, O priests, who despise My Name, lit. despisers of My Name, habitually beyond others. The contempt of God came specially from those bound most to honour him. Priests, as consecrated to God, belonged especially to God. "13 Malachi begins his prophecy and correction by the correction of the priests; because the reformation of the state and of the laity hangs upon the reformation of the clergy and the priest; for 14 as is the priest, such also is the people." He turns, with a suddenness which must have been startling to them, to them as the centre of the offending.

And ye say, Wherein have we despised Thy Name? Before, it was ignorance of God's love: now it is ignorance of self and of sin. They affect to themselves innocence and are unconscious of any sin. They said to themselves doubtless, (as many do now) "we cannot help it; we do the best we can, under the circumstances." Without some knowledge of God's love, there can be no sense of sin; without some sense of sin, no knowledge of His love. They take the defensive, they are simply surprised, like Cain, 15 Am I my brother's keeper? or many of the lost in the Day of judgement, 16 Many will say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy Name? and in Thy Name have cast out devils? and in Thy Name done many wonderful works? and yet were all the while workers of iniquity, to whom He will say, I never knew you: and, 17 Lord, when saw we Thee an hungred, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto Thee? And yet they shall go away into everlasting punishment.

7. Offering polluted bread upon Mine altar. This, continuing on the words, despisers of My Name<sup>18</sup>, is the answer to their question, Wherein have we despised Thy Name? Bread might stand, in itself, either for the shew-bread, or for the "minchah," meal-offering, which was the necessary accompaniment of sacrifices and sometimes the whole. But here the polluted bread cannot be the shewbread, since this was not put upon the altar, but upon its own table; and although the altar is, as here, also called "a table"<sup>19</sup> in regard to the sacrifice hereon consumed, "the table" of the shewbread is nowhere called "altar." The prophet then means by bread, either the meal-offering, as representing the sacrifice, or the offerings by fire altogether, as in Ezekiel, 20 When ye offer My bread, the fat and the blood; and in Leviticus, 21 the offerings of the Lord, made by fire, the bread of their God, do they offer; and of the peace-offering<sup>22</sup>, the priest shall burn it upon the altar; the bread of the offering made by fire unto the Lord: and specifically, of animals with blemish, as these, it is forbidden, 23 Neither from a stranger's hand shall ye offer the

those in Ewald Lehrb. § 841. b 8. p. 836. ed. 8.) This case is however more developed than the rest, as not being contemporaneous only, but an explanation of that expressed by the finite verb. עָרַב is used with ל, of offerings to God, Am. v. 25, Mal. ii. 12; with בְּ, here only.

<sup>19</sup> In Ezek. xli. 22, the "altar" is called the table that is before the Lord, and in regard to the offering of the sacrifice, it is said, they shall come near to my table, Ezek. xli. 15, 16.

9 And now, I pray you, beseech † God <sup>† Heb. the face of God.</sup> that he will be gracious unto us: <sup>† Hos. 13. 9.</sup> this hath been † by your means: will he regard <sup>† Heb. from your hand.</sup>

bread of your God of any of these, because their corruption is in them, blemishes in them: they shall not be accepted for you. It was, as it were, a feast of God with man, and what was withdrawn from the use of man by fire, was, as it were, consumed by God, to Whom it was offered.

It was polluted, in that it was contrary to the law of God which forbade to sacrifice any animal, lame or blind or with any ill blemish, as being inconsistent with the typical perfection of the sacrifice. Even the Gentiles were careful about the perfection of their sacrifices.

And ye say, Wherewith have we polluted Thee? It is a bold expression. Yet a word, to which we are but too ill-accustomed, which expresses what most have done, “dishonour God,” comes to the same. Though less bold in expression, they are yet like in meaning. <sup>4</sup>Will ye pollute Me any more among My people? or, <sup>5</sup>that My Name should not be polluted before the heathen. <sup>6</sup>My holy Name shall Israel no more defile; <sup>7</sup>I will not let them pollute My Name any more. <sup>8</sup>Much more in the new law, in which the Sacrifice is Christ Himself our God, whence the Apostle says expressly, <sup>9</sup>Whoso eateth this bread and drinketh this Cup of the Lord unworthily, shall be guilty of the Body and Blood of the Lord. <sup>1</sup>For when the Sacraments are violated, Himself, Whose Sacraments they are, is violated.” God speaks of our acts with an unveiled plainness, which we should not dare to use. <sup>2</sup>As we are said to sanctify God, when we minister to Him in holiness and righteousness, and so, as far as in us lies, shew that He is holy; so we are said to pollute Him, when we conduct ourselves irreverently and viciously before Him, especially in His worship, and thereby, as far as in us lies, shew that He is not holy and is to be dishonoured.”

In that ye say, the table of the Lord is contemptible, lit. contemptible is it<sup>10</sup>, and so any contemptible thing might be offered on it. They said this probably, not in words, but in deeds. Or, if in words, in plausible words. <sup>11</sup>God doth not require the ornamenting of the altar, but the devotion of the offerers.” <sup>1</sup>What good is it, if we offer the best? Be what we offer, what it may, it is all to be consumed by fire.” <sup>8</sup>The pretext at once of avarice and gluttony!” And so they kept the best for themselves. They were poor, on their return from the captivity. Any how, the sacrifices were offered. What could it matter to God? And so they dispensed with God’s law.

8. And if ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil? Others, it is not evil, as we should say, “there is no harm in it.” Both imply, alike, an utter unconsciousness on the part of the offerer, that it was evil: the one, in irony, that this was always their answer, “there is nothing amiss;” the other is an indignant question, “is there indeed nought amiss?” And this seems the most natural.

The sacrifice of the blind and lame was expressly forbidden in the law<sup>14</sup>, and the sick in manifold varieties of animal disease. Whatever hath a blemish ye shall not offer, <sup>15</sup>blind or with limb broken, or wounded or mangy or scabby or scurvy. Perfectness was an essential principle of sacrifice; whether, as in the daily sacrifice, or the sin or trespass-offering, typical of the all-perfect Sacrifice, or in the whole-burnt-offering, of the entire self-oblation. But these knew better than God, what was fit for Him and them. His law was to be modified by circumstances. He would not be so particular, (as men now say so often.)

Is it then fit to offer to God what under the very same circumstances man would not offer to man? Against these idle, ungrateful, covetous thoughts God saith,

Offer it now unto thy governor. He appeals to our own instinctive thought of propriety to our fellow-creature, which may so often be a test to us. No one would think of acting to a fellow-creature, as they do to Almighty God. Who would make diligent preparation to receive any great one of the earth, and turn his back upon him, when come? Yet what else is the behaviour of most Christians after Holy Communion? If thou wouldst not do this to a mortal man, who is but dust and ashes, how much less to God Almighty, the King of kings and Lord of lords! <sup>2</sup>The words are a reproof to those most negligent persons, who go through their prayers to God without fear attention reverence or feeling; but if they have to speak to some great man, prelate or prince, approach him with great reverence, speak carefully and distinctly and are in awe of him. Do not thou prefer the creature to the Creator, man to God, the servant to the Lord, and that Lord, so exalted and so Infinite.”

9. And now entreat, I pray you, God<sup>16</sup>, that He will be gracious unto you. This is not a call to repentance, for he assumes that God would not accept them. It is rather irony;

10 Who is there even among you that

"go now, seek the favour of God, as ye would not that of your governor." From your hand, not from your fathers, not from aliens, hath this been: will He accept persons from you? The unusual construction seems to imply a difference of meaning; as if he would say, that it consisted not with the justice of God, that He should be an accepter of persons, (which He declares that He is not) which yet He would be, were He to accept them, while acting thus.

10. Who is there even among you? This stinginess in God's service was not confined to those offices which cost something, as the sacrifices. Not even services absolutely costless, which required only a little trouble, as that of closing the folding-doors of the temple or the outer court, or bringing the fire to consume the sacrifices, would they do without some special hire. All was mercenary and hireling service. Others have rendered it as a wish, who is there among you! i.e. would that there were one among you, who would close the doors altogether; so shall ye not kindle fire on Mine altar for nought, i.e. fruitlessly! But apart from the difficulty of the construction, it is not God's way to quench the smouldering flax. He Who bids, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost, accepts any imperfect service rather than none. He does not break off the last link, which binds man to Himself. Then, if or when God willed His service to surcease, He would do it Himself, as He did by the destruction of the temple before the Captivity, or finally by the Romans. It would have been an ungodly act, (such as was only done by Ahaz, perhaps the most ungodly king of Israel<sup>1</sup>), and one which especially called down His wrath<sup>2</sup>, to close the doors, and therewith to break off all sacrifice. Manasseh carried the worship of false gods into the temple itself; Ahaz, as far as in him lay, abolished the service of God. A prophet of God could not express a wish, that pious Israelites (for it is presupposed that they would do this out of zeal for God's honour) should bring the service of God to an end.

He sums up with an entire rejection of them, present and future. I have no pleasure in you; it is a term of repudiation<sup>3</sup>, sometimes of disgust<sup>4</sup>, neither will I accept an offering at your hands. He says not simply, your burnt-offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto Me, but, I will not accept it. Such as they were, such they would be hereafter. God would not accept their sacrifices, but would replace them.

11. For. The form of words does not express whether this declaration relates to the present or the future. It is a vivid present, such as is often used to describe the future. But the things spoken of shew it to be future. The Jewish sacrifices had defects, partly incidental, partly inherent.

Incidental were those, with which the Prophet had upbraided them; inherent, (apart from their mere typical character) that they never could be the religion of the world, since they were locally fixed at Jerusalem. Malachi tells them of a new sacrifice, which should be offered throughout the then heathen world, grounded on His new revelation of Himself to them. For great shall be My Name among the heathen. The prophet anticipates an objection<sup>6</sup>, which the Jews might make to him. What then will God do unto His great Name? Those by which He would replace them, would be more worthy of God in two ways, 1) in themselves, 2) in their universality. Then, whatsoever the heathen worshipped, even if some worshipped an unknown God, His Name was not known to them, nor great among them. Those who knew of Him, knew of Him, not as the Lord of heaven and earth, but as the God of the Jews only; their offerings were not pure, but manifoldly defiled. A Hebrew prophet could not be an apologist for heathen idolatry amidst its abominations, or set it on a level with the worship which God had, for the time, appointed; much less could he set it forth as the true acceptable service of God<sup>8</sup>. Malachi himself speaks of it, as an aggravation of cruelty in their divorcing of their wives, that they married the daughter of a strange god. The worship of those Jews, who remained, out of secular interests, in foreign countries, could not be represented as the "pure offering"; for they made no offerings: then as now, these being forbidden out of Jerusalem; nor would the worship of such Jews, as were scattered in the large empire of Persia, be contrasted with that at Jerusalem, as the pure worship; else why should the Jews have returned? It would have been an abolition of the law before its time. Malachi prophesies then, as had Micah, Isaiah, Zephaniah<sup>10</sup>, of a new revelation of God, when, and in which, men should worship Him, every one from his place, even all the isles of the heathen.

Our Lord Himself explains and expands it in His words to the Samaritan woman; <sup>11</sup> Woman, believe Me, the hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father.—The hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship Him. God is a Spirit; and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth, and declared the rejection of the Jews, sealing their own sentence against themselves, <sup>12</sup> I say unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof; and before, <sup>13</sup> Many shall come from the East and West, and shall sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, and the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness.

the wise, who in every place are occupied in the rules of the Divine worship; so also all the prayers of Israel, which they make in every place, these are like a pure oblation (Minchah), and so Jonathan interprets, 'at whatever time ye shall do My will, I receive your prayers, and My great name is sanctified by you, and your prayer is like a pure oblation before Me.' Incense shall be offered unto My name, lit. I think, there shall be incense, oblation made unto My name [this is a mere question of construction<sup>1</sup>], and a pure oblation.

This sacrifice, which should be offered, is designated by the special name of meal-offering<sup>2</sup>. God would not accept it from the Jews; He would, from the Heathen. It was a special sacrifice, offered by itself as an unbloody sacrifice, or together with the bloody sacrifice. <sup>3</sup> It is most holy, as the sin-offering and as the trespass-offering. In the daily sacrifice it was offered morning and evening, with the lamb. As this was typical of the precious blood-shedding of the Lamb without spot upon the Cross, so was the meal-offering which accompanied it, of the Holy Eucharist.

The early Christians saw the force of the prediction, that sacrifice was contrasted with sacrifice, the bloody sacrifices which were ended by the "One full perfect and sufficient Sacrifice Oblation and Satisfaction" made by our Lord "on the Altar of the Cross for the sins of the whole world," and those sacrifices which He commanded to be made on our Altars, as a memorial of Him. So S. Justin, who was converted probably A.D. 133, within 30 years from the death of S. John, says, "God has therefore beforehand declared, that all who through this name offer those sacrifices, which Jesus, Who is the Christ, commanded to be offered, that is to say, in the Eucharist of the Bread and of the Cup, which are offered in every part of the world by us Christians, are well-pleasing to Him. But those sacrifices, which are offered by you and through those priests of yours, He wholly rejects, saying, And I will not accept your offerings at your hands. For from the rising of the sun even to the going down of the same, My Name is glorified among the Gentiles; but ye profane it."

He points out further the failure of the Jewish explanation as to their sacrifices, in that the Church was every where, not so the Jews. "You and your teachers deceive yourselves, when you interpret this passage of Scripture of those of your nation who were in the dispersion<sup>4</sup>, and say that it speaks of their prayers and sacrifices made in every place, as pure and well-pleasing, and know that you speak falsely, and endeavour in every way to impose upon yourselves; first, because your people are not found, even now, from the rising to the setting of the sun, but there are nations, in which none of your race have ever dwelt: whilst there is not one nation of men, whether Barbarians, or Greeks, or by whatsoever name distinguished, whether of those (nomads) who live in waggons, or of those who have no houses, or those pastoral people that dwell in tents, among whom prayers and thanksgivings are not offered to the Father and Creator of all things, through the name of the crucified Jesus. And you know that at the time when the prophet Malachi said this, the dispersion of you through the whole world, in which you now are, had not yet taken place; as is also shewn by Scripture."

S. Irenæus in the same century, "He took that which is part of the creation, viz. bread, and gave thanks, saying, This is My Body. And the Cup likewise, which is of the creation which appertains unto us, He professed to be His own Blood, and taught men the new oblation of the New Testament; which the Church receiving from the Apostles offers unto God in the world:—unto Him Who giveth us nourishment, the first-fruits of His own gifts, in the New Testament; of which in the twelve prophets Malachi gave beforehand this intimation [quoting Mal. i. 10, 11]; most evidently intimating hereby, that while the former people should cease to make offerings to God, in every place sacrifice should be offered unto Him, and that in pureness; His Name also is glorified among the Gentiles. Now what other name is there, which is glorified among the Gentiles, than that which belongs to our Lord, by Whom the Father is glorified, and man is glorified? And because man belongs to His Own Son, and is made by Him, He calls him His own. And as if some King were himself to paint an image of his own son, he justly calls it his own image, on both accounts, first that it is his son's, next, that he himself made it: so also the Name of Jesus Christ, which is glorified in the Church throughout the whole world, the Father professes to be His own, both because it is His Son's, and because He Himself wrote and gave it for the salvation of men. Because therefore the Name of the Son properly belongs to the Father, and in God Almighty through Jesus Christ the Church makes her offering, well saith He on both accounts, And in every place incense is offered unto My Name, and a pure sacrifice. And incense, John in the Apocalypse declares to be the prayers of the Saints. Therefore the offering of the Church, which the Lord hath taught to be offered in the whole world, is accounted with God as a pure sacrifice, and accepted of Him."

Tertullian contrasts the "sacerdotal law through Moses, in Leviticus, prescribing to the people of Israel, that sacrifices should in no other place be offered to God than in the land of promise, which the Lord God was about to give to the people Israel and to their brethren, in order that on Israel's introduction thither, there should be there celebrated sacrifices and holocausts, as well for sins as for souls, and no where else but in the holy land<sup>5</sup>," and this subsequent prediction of "the Spirit through the prophets, that in every place and in every land there should be offered sacrifices to God. As He says through the angel Malachi, one of the twelve prophets, (citing the place)."

S. Hippolytus, a disciple of S. Irenæus, A. D. 220. martyr, in a commentary on Daniel, says that "when Anti-Christ cometh, the sacrifice and libation will be taken away, which is now in every place offered by the Gentiles to God." The terms "Sacrifice offered in every place" are terms of Malachi.

So S. Cyprian, in his Testimonies against the Jews, sums up the teaching of the passage under this head, "That the old sacrifice was to be made void, and a new sacrifice instituted."

<sup>1</sup> לִשְׁמִי are, I think most probably, two independent impersonal passive participles, taken as future, "will be incensed, offered" [wird geräuchert, dargebracht] as Ewald (Lehrb. 295 a) נִשְׁמָה, "there is begun," נִשְׁמָה, "there is wasted," נִשְׁמָה "there is spoken" (Ps. lxxxvii. 8), and this place. Tanchum praises Abulwalid for taking לִשְׁמִי as a noun = שְׁמִי (Lib. Rad. col. 634). He adds, "The rest (לִשְׁמִי) take them as adjectives with an unexpressed substantive." This, I think right: for, although לִשְׁמִי might be 'what is incensed,' and so a subst., נִשְׁמָה is used elsewhere of offering a sacrifice, not of offering incense, and so לִשְׁמִי could not be the subject to it.

CHRIST

In the "1 Apostolic Constitutions," the prophecy is quoted as "said by God of His œcumenical Church."

Eusebius says, "2 The truth bears witness to the prophetic word, whereby God, rejecting the Mosaic sacrifices, foretells that which shall be among us. For from the rising of the sun &c. We sacrifice then to the supreme God the sacrifice of praise; we sacrifice the Divine, reverend and holy oblation: we sacrifice, in a new way according to the New Testament, the pure sacrifice. The broken heart is also called a sacrifice to God—We sacrifice also the Memory of that great Sacrifice, performing it according to the mysteries which have been transmitted by Him."

S. Cyril of Jerusalem<sup>3</sup> speaks of it only as prophesying the rejection of the Jews and the adoption of the Gentiles.

In the liturgy of S. Mark<sup>4</sup>, it is naturally quoted, only, as fulfilled "in the reasonable and unbloody sacrifice, which all nations offer to Thee, O Lord, from the rising of the sun to the setting thereof," not in reference to the cessation of Jewish sacrifices.

S. Chrysostom dwells on its peculiar force, coming from so late a prophet<sup>5</sup>. "Hear Malachi, who came after the other prophets. For I adduce, for the time, no testimony either of Isaiah or Jeremiah or any other before the Captivity, lest thou shouldest say that the terrible things which he foretold were exhausted in the Captivity. But I adduce a prophet, after the return from Babylon and the restoration of your city, prophesying clearly about you. For when they had returned, and recovered their city, and rebuilt the temple and performed the sacrifices, foretelling this present desolation then future, and the taking away of the sacrifice, Malachi thus speaks in the Person of God [ver. 10 fin.—12 beg.]. When, o Jew, happened all this? When was incense offered to God in every place? when a pure sacrifice? Thou couldest not name any other time, than this, after the Coming of Christ. If the prophet foretelleth not this time and our sacrifice, but the Jewish, the prophecy will be against the law. For if, when Moses commandeth that sacrifice should be offered in no other place than the Lord God should choose, and shutteth up those sacrifices in one place, the prophet says that incense should be offered in every place and a pure sacrifice, he opposeth and contradiceth Moses. But there is no strife nor contention. For Moses speaketh of one sacrifice, and Malachi of another. Where doth this appear? [From the place, not Judæa only; from the mode, that it should be pure; from the offerers, not Israel, but the nations,] from East to West, shewing that whatever of earth the sun surveys, the preaching will embrace.—He calls the former sacrifice impure, not in its own nature but in the mind of the offerers; if one compares the sacrifice itself, there is such a boundless distance, that this [that offered by Christians] might in comparison be called 'pure.'"

Even the cold, but clear, Theodoret has, "6 Foretelling to the Jews the cessation of the legal priesthood, he announces the pure and unbloody sacrifice of the Gentiles. And first he says to the Jews, I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will not accept a sacrifice at your hands. Then he foreshews the piety of the Gentiles, For from the rising of the sun &c. (Mal. i. 11.) You then I will wholly reject; for I detest altogether what you do. Wherefore also I reject the sacrifice offered by you; but instead of you, I have the whole world to worship Me. For the dwellers in the whole earth, which the rising and setting sun illumines, will every where both offer to Me incense, and will sacrifice to Me the pure sacrifice, which I love. For they shall know My name and My will, and shall offer to Me reverence due. So the Lord said to the Samaritan woman, Woman, believe Me, that the hour cometh and now is, when neither in this mountain, nor in Jerusalem shall ye worship the Father.—The blessed Paul, being instructed in this, says, "7 I will that men pray every where &c., and the Divine Malachi clearly taught us in this place the worship now used; for the circumscribed worship of the priests is brought to an end, and every place is accounted fit for the worship of God, and the sacrifice of irrational victims is ended, and He, our spotless Lamb, Who taketh away the sin of the world, is sacrificed."

Lastly, S. Augustine, "8 Malachi, prophesying of the Church which we see propagated through Christ, says most plainly to the Jews in the person of God, I have no pleasure in you, and will not receive an offering at your hands. For from the rising of the sun &c. Since we see this sacrifice through the priesthood of Christ after the order of Melchisedek, now offered to God in every place from the rising of the sun to its setting; but the sacrifice of the Jews, of which it is said, I have no pleasure in you, neither will I accept an offering from your hands, they cannot deny to have ceased; why do they yet expect another Christ, since what they read as prophesied and see fulfilled, could not be fulfilled, except through Him?"

12. And ye have profaned [<sup>9</sup>are habitually profaning it], in that ye say. It was the daily result of their daily lives and acts. "10 It is probable that the priests did not use such words, but that by their very deeds, they proclaimed this aloud: as in the, The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. For in that he is seen to be a despiser, though he say it not in words, yet, by their very deeds and by the crookedness of their lives, they all-but cry out, There is no God. For they who live as though God beheld not, and do all things recklessly and unholily, by their own deeds and works deny God. So they who are not earnest to preserve to the holy Altar the reverence becoming to it, by the very things which they do, say,

The table of the Lord is despised." Not the table of shew-bread, since it is so called in reference to the sacrifice offered thereon. Ezekiel had probably so called the altar, which he saw in his vision of the new temple<sup>11</sup>. It is what was before called the altar; an altar, in regard to the sacrifices offered to God; a table, in regard to the food of the sacrifice therefrom received. Both names, "altar"<sup>12</sup> and "table"<sup>13</sup> being received in the New Testament, both were received in the

It may be here a different profaneness of the priests. They connived at the sin of the people in sacrificing the maimed animals which they brought, and yet, since they had their food from the sacrifices, and such animals are likely to have been neglected and ill-conditioned, they may very probably have complained of the poverty of their lot, and despised the whole service. For the words used, its produce, the eating thereof is contemptible belong to their portion, not to what was consumed by fire. With this agrees their cry,

13. What a weariness! What an onerous service it is! The service of God is its own reward. If not, it becomes a greater toil, with less reward from this earth, than the things of this earth. Our only choice is between love and weariness.

And ye have snuffed [puffed] at it <sup>2</sup>, i.e. at the altar; as a thing contemptible. Ye have brought that which was taken by violence <sup>3</sup>. In despising any positive law of God, they despised the lawgiver; and so, from contempt of the ceremonial law, they went on to break the moral law. It were indeed a mockery of God, to break a law whereby He bound man to man, and therefrom to seek to appease Himself. Yet in rough times, people, even in Christianity, have made their account with their souls, by giving to the poor a portion of what they had taken from the rich. "God," it was said to such an one, "rejects the gifts obtained by violence and robbery. He loves mercy, justice and humanity, and by the lovers of these only will He be worshipped." <sup>4</sup> "He that sacrificeth of a thing wrongfully gotten, his offering is ridiculous, and the gifts of unjust men are not accepted. The Most High is not pleased with the offerings of the wicked, neither is He pacified for sin by the multitude of sacrifices. Whoso bringeth an offering of the goods of the poor doeth as one that killeth the son before the father's eyes."

14. Cursed is the deceiver. <sup>5</sup> "The fraudulent, hypocritical, false or deceitful dealer, who makes a show of one thing, and doth or intends another, nor doth to his power what he would make a show of doing; as if he could deceive God in doing in His service otherwise than He required, and yet be accepted by Him." The whole habit of these men was not to break with God, but to keep well with Him on as easy terms as they could. They even went beyond what the law required in making vows, probably for some temporal end, and then substituted for that which had typical perfection, the less valuable animal, the ewe <sup>6</sup>, and that, diseased. It was probably, to prevent self-deceit, that the law commanded that the oblation for a vow should be <sup>7</sup> a male without blemish, per- fect; lest (which may be a temptation in impulsive vows) repenting of their vow, they should persuade themselves, that they had vowed less than they had. Ordinarily, then, it would not have been allowed to one, who had not the best to offer, to vow at all. But, in their alleged poverty, the prophet supposes that God would so far dispense with His own law, and accept the best which any one had, although it did not come up to that law. Hence the clause, which hath in his flock a male. <sup>8</sup> If thou hast not a male, that curse in no wise injureth thee. But saying this, he sheweth, that they have what is best, and offer what is bad."

14 But cursed be <sup>8</sup> the deceiver, || which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing: || for I am a great King, saith the LORD of hosts, and my name is dreadful among the <sup>9</sup> heathen.

They sinned, not against religion only, but against justice also. <sup>9</sup> "For as a merchant, who offers his goods at a certain price, if he supply them afterwards adulterated and corrupted, is guilty of fraud and is unjust, so he who promised to God a sacrifice worthy of God, and, according to the law, perfect and sound, is fraudulent and sins against justice, if he afterwards gives one, defective, mutilated, vitiated, and is guilty of theft in a sacred thing, and so of sacrilege."

Clergy or "all who have vowed, should learn hence, that what they have vowed should be given to God, entire, manly, perfect, the best.—For, reverence for the supreme and Divine Majesty to Whom they consecrate themselves demandeth this, that they should offer Him the highest best and most perfect, making themselves a whole-burnt-offering to God."

<sup>10</sup> "They who abandon all things of the world, and kindle their whole mind with the fire of Divine love, these become a sacrifice and a whole-burnt-offering to Almighty God." <sup>11</sup> "Man himself, consecrated and devoted in the name of God, is a sacrifice." He then offers a corrupt thing who, like Ananias, keeps back part of the price, and is the more guilty, because, while it was his own, it was in his own power.

I am a great King. <sup>12</sup> "As God is Alone Lord through His universal Providence and His intrinsic authority, so He Alone is King, and a King so great, that of His greatness or dignity and perfection there is no end."

My Name is dreadful among the heathen. Absence of any awe of God was a central defect of these Jews. They treated Him, as they would not a fellow-creature, for whom they had any respect or awe or fear. Some remaining instinct kept them from parting with Him; but they yielded a cold, wearisome heartless service. Malachi points to the root of the evil, the ignorance, how awful God is. This is the root of so much irreverence in people's theories, thoughts, conversations, systems, acts, of the present day also. They know neither God or themselves. The relation is summed up in those words to a saint <sup>13</sup>, "Knowest thou well, Who I am, and who thou art? I am He Who Is, and thou art she <sup>3</sup> This is the one sense of לז, which occurs in 84 separate passages (besides two met. Job xxiv. 19. Pr. iv. 16.). It is used specially of the robbery of the poor, whether by wrong judgement (Eccl. v. 7. [Heb.] Is. x. 2) or open violence. The meaning "torn" was gained, as if the animal had been carried off by beasts (θηπιδάστρον), the eating of which was forbidden, Ex. xxii. 30, Lev. vii. 24, xxii. 8. Ezek. iv. 14, xlv. 81. ## CHAPTER II.

1 He sharply reproveth the priests for neglecting their covenant, 11 and the people for idolatry, 14 for adultery, 17 and for infidelity.

AND now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you.

2 <sup>a</sup> If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the Lord of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and I will curse your bless-who is not." So Job says in the presence of God, <sup>1</sup> I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee: wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes. To correct this, God, from the beginning, insists on the title which He gives Himself. <sup>2</sup> Circumcise the foreskin of your hearts and be no more stiff-necked: for the Lord your God is God of gods and Lord of lords, the great God, the mighty and the terrible; and in warning, <sup>3</sup> If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law that are written in this book, that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, The Lord thy God, then the Lord thy God will make thy plagues wonderful &c.

II. 1. And now this is My commandment unto you, not a commandment, which He gave them, but a commandment in regard to them. As God said of old, upon obedience, <sup>4</sup> I will command My blessing unto you, so now He would command what should reach them, but a curse. <sup>5</sup> He returns from the people to the priests, as the fountain of the evil, whose carelessness about things sacred he had rebuked before. Let the priests of the new law hear this rebuke of God, and conceive it dictated to them by the Holy Spirit to hear, from whom God rightly requires greater holiness, and so will punish them more grievously, if careless or scandalous in their office." All Christians are, in some sense, <sup>6</sup> a royal, holy priesthood, over and above the special "Christian priesthood;" as the Jews, over and above the special priesthood of Aaron, were a <sup>7</sup> kingdom of priests. What follows then belongs, in their degree, to them and their duties.

2. If ye will not lay to heart, viz. the rebukes addressed to them, to give glory to God. For the glory of God is the end and aim of the priesthood. This should be the principle and rule of their whole life, <sup>8</sup> "to the greater glory of God." I will send the curse upon you, viz. that which He had threatened in the law upon disobedience; and will curse your blessings, will turn your blessings into a curse. He does not say, I will send you curses instead of blessings, but, I will make the blessings themselves a curse. <sup>9</sup> The things which should have been to their wealth became to them an occasion of falling; to the proud, the things which lift them up; to the gluttonous, their abundance; to the avaricious, their wealth; which, if used to the glory of God, become blessings, do, when self not God is their end, by God's dispensation and Providence, become a curse to them. <sup>10</sup> The goods of nature, the goods of ings: yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart.

3 Behold, I will || corrupt your seed, || and † spread dung upon your faces, even † the dung of your solemn feasts; and || one shall <sup>b</sup> take you away with it.

4 And ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you, that my covenant might be with Levi, saith the Lord of hosts.

fortune, the goods of the Church allowed to you, I will turn to your greater damnation, permitting you to abuse them to pride; and your damnation shall be the more penal, the more good things ye have received from Me. Whence Christ declares in the Gospel, <sup>11</sup> Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required!"

Yea, I have cursed them [lit. it], i.e. each one of the blessings, already. God's judgements as well as His mercies are individual with a minute care, shewing that it is His doing. The curse had already gone forth, and had begun to seize upon them from the time that they began to despise His Name. His judgements do not break in at once, but little by little, with warnings of their approach, that so we may turn to Him, and escape the wrath to come.

3. Lo, I will rebuke the seed<sup>12</sup> for your sake, i.e. that it should not grow. He Who worketh by His sustaining will all the operations of nature, would at His will withhold them. Neither priests nor Levites cultivated the soil; yet, since the tithes were assigned to them, the diminution of the harvest affected them. The meal-offering too was a requisite part of the sacrifice <sup>13</sup>.

And spread dung upon your faces, the dung<sup>14</sup> of your solemn feasts, or, of your sacrifices<sup>15</sup>. It was by the law carried without the camp and burned with the animal itself. They had brought before the face of God maimed, unfitting sacrifices; they should have them cast back, with their refuse, upon them; <sup>16</sup> "as a lord that rejecteth a gift, brought to him by his servant, casts it back in his face." <sup>17</sup> Of your sacrifices, not of Mine; for I am not worshipped in them: ye seek to please, not Me, but yourselves." So God said of Eli, <sup>18</sup> them that honour Me I will honour, and they that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed.

And one shall take you away with it, lit. to it. They should be swept away, as if they were an appendage to it, as God said, <sup>19</sup> I will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till all be gone. As are the offerings, so shall it be with the offerers.

4. And ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you: this, which He had just uttered. They who believe not God when threatening, know that He is in earnest and not to be trifled with, through His punishing. That My covenant might be with Levi<sup>20</sup>. God willed to punish those who at that time rebelled against Him, that He might spare those who should come after them. He chastened the fathers, who shewed their contempt towards Him, that their sons, taking warning thereby, might not be cut off. He continues to say, what the covenant was, which He willed still to be, if they would repent.

Luke xii. 48. <sup>12</sup> Keil objects to this rendering of the text and adopts the punctuation קָנָה from lxx. Ag. Vulg. "the arm," i.e. render it useless and incapable of discharging its office. But when קָנָה is used of other than men themselves, it is a whole, as to which the metaphor is used, either being animate, as "the devourer," Mal. iii. 11, or pictured as animate, as "the sea," Ps. cvi. 9. Nah. i. 4. <sup>13</sup> See also Joel i. 18. ii. 14.

<sup>14</sup> קָנָה is only used of the dung, as it lies in the animal killed for sacrifice, Ex. xxix. 4, Lev. iv. 11, viii. 7, xxi. 27, Nu. xix. 5, and here. <sup>15</sup> אֵין is certainly the animal sacrificed at the feast, Ex. xxiii. 18, Ps. cxviii. 27, and so probably here. So Kim. <sup>16</sup> Abarb. Poc. <sup>17</sup> Rib. <sup>18</sup> 1 Sam. ii. 30. <sup>19</sup> 1 Kgs. xiv. 10. <sup>20</sup> Keil says that אֵין means indeed to "exist," but not to "continue existence." But the continuance is involved in the existence in the future, for the being in the future involves the continued being. His own rendering, "that this should be My covenant with Levi," requires a more definite subject; and it should rather be, "that My covenant with Levi should come to this." In ver. 5, 6, he speaks of the past emphatically, "My covenant was with him," "the law of truth was in his mouth." So it shall be with you, if you become like him.

5. My covenant was with him life and peace; lit. the life and the peace; that, which alone is true life and peace. The covenant was not with Levi himself, but with Aaron, his representative, with whom the covenant was made in the desert, as is indeed here expressed; and, in him, with all his race<sup>1</sup> after him, who succeeded him in his office; as, when it is said, that <sup>2</sup>Aaron and his sons offered upon the altar of burnt offering, it must needs be understood, not of Aaron in person alone and his sons then living, but of any of his race that succeeded in his and their room. So our Lord promised to be with His Apostles, <sup>3</sup>always to the end of the world, i.e. with them and those whom they should appoint in their stead, and these others, until He should Himself come. God promised, if they would keep the law, that they should live in peace on the earth; yea, that they should have peace of mind and a life of grace. Life is an indefectible being, which man does not forfeit by sin, to which death is no interruption, changing only the place of the soul's life.

And I gave them to him, in, or as, fear, <sup>4</sup>"Fear, not servile but filial and pure, as S. Paul bids Christians, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." God gave them an awful gift, to be held with fear and awe, for its very preciousness, as one would hold anxiously what is very precious, yet very fragile and easily marred.

And he feared Me, and was afraid before My Name. Malachi unites two words, the second expressive of strong fear, by which a man is, as it were, crushed or broken. They are often united in Hebrew, but as expressing terror, which men are bidden not to feel before men. Toward man it is ever said, <sup>5</sup>“fear not, neither be ye dismayed; toward God Alone, it is a matter of praise. Man's highest fear is too little; for he knows not, Who God is. So Isaiah says, <sup>7</sup>“Fear ye not their fear [the fear of this people], nor be afraid. Sanctify the Lord of hosts Himself, and let Him be your fear and let Him be your dread.” <sup>8</sup>“What can be more precious (than this fear)? For it is written, He who feareth the Lord will be rewarded.” <sup>10</sup>The fear of the Lord is honour and glory and gladness and a crown of rejoicing.” He saith, the fear, wherewith he feareth Me and was afraid, i.e. he received the fear of God in his whole heart and soul. For these reduplications and emphases suggest to the hearer how rooted in virtue are those thus praised.<sup>9</sup>

6. The law of truth was in his mouth. Apart from those cases, which were brought to the priests at the tabernacle<sup>11</sup>, in which their voice was the voice of God through them, to teach the law was part of the office both of the priest and

Levite. Of the priest God says; <sup>12</sup>that ye may teach the children of Israel all the statutes, which the Lord hath spoken unto them by the hand of Moses: of the tribe of Levi generally Moses says, <sup>13</sup>They shall teach Jacob Thy judgements and Israel Thy law. After the schism of the ten tribes, a prophet says to Asa, that Israel had <sup>14</sup>for a long time been without the true God and without a teaching priest and without law. They are evil times, of which Ezekiel says, <sup>15</sup>the law shall perish from the priest; and God says of corrupt priests, <sup>16</sup>The priest said not, where is the Lord? and they that handle the law knew Me not. <sup>17</sup>They did violence to My law. On their return from the captivity Ezra was known to Artaxerxes as <sup>18</sup>a scribe of the law of the God of heaven, and he looked upon him apparently, as one who should keep the people in good order by teaching it. <sup>19</sup>Thou, Ezra, after the wisdom of thy God which is in thy hand, set magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people which are beyond the river, all such as know the laws of thy God, and teach ye them that know them not: and whosoever will not do the law of thy God or the law of the king, let judgement be executed speedily upon him. Ezra says of himself, that he <sup>20</sup>had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord and to do it and to teach in Israel statutes and judgements.

<sup>21</sup>God's law is the truth: the true doctrine of this law did he teach the people, and instruct them in the true meaning and intent thereof, that, according to the right rule, they might frame all their actions; nothing of it did he conceal from them, nor teach any thing contrary to it or false. This was in his mouth; nothing contrary to it was found in his lips.<sup>22</sup>

And iniquity was not found in his lips. He expresses the perfectness of that teaching, first positively, then negatively. The true priest taught truth without any admixture of wrong. <sup>23</sup>Not he only is a betrayer of the truth, who, transgressing the truth, openly teaches a lie for the truth; but he too, who does not freely utter the truth, which he ought to utter freely, or who does not freely defend the truth which he ought to defend freely, is a betrayer of the truth. <sup>24</sup>For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.” “Nothing,” says S. Ambrose<sup>25</sup> to the Emperor Theodosius, “is so perilous to the priest with God, so disgraceful with men, as not to utter freely what he thinks. For it is written, <sup>26</sup>I spake of Thy testimonies before kings, and was not ashamed.” And therefore a priest's silence ought to displease your Clemency; his freedom, to please you. For you are involved in the peril of my silence, art aided by the good of my free speech.<sup>27</sup>

He walked with Me. To awe of God, truthfulness of teaching, he adds a devout continual intercourse with God. Like the patriarchs of old, Enoch and Noah, he <sup>27</sup>walked with God. He not only lived in the Presence, but walked up and down with Him, through his whole life, as a Friend; “having respect in all things to Him and His glory.”

In peace and equity. The inward peace with God overflowing in peace to men. The brief words comprise the duties of both tables; as that, <sup>1</sup> Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see God; <sup>2</sup> Live in peace, and the God of love and peace shall be with you; <sup>3</sup> blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God. <sup>4</sup> "God's covenant with him was of peace"; so he observed it on his part." Even equity, or real considerate justice, would alienate those, whom it found wrong, so he joins with it peace, that even equity was not administered but with love. <sup>5</sup> "To have peace with God, what is it but to will to be mended and to do what He willeth, and in nothing to offend Him?"

And turned away many from iniquity. They, the true priests of the Old Testament then, were not satisfied with their own sanctification, but were zealous for the salvation of souls. What a history of zeal for the glory of God and the conversion of sinners in those, of whom the world knows nothing; of whose working, but for the three words <sup>7</sup> in the closing book of the Old Testament, we should have known nothing! The Prophets upbraid the sins of the many; the Psalms are the prayers given to and used by the pious; such incidental sayings as these, record some of the fruits. "Be of the disciples of Aaron," said Hillel<sup>6</sup>, "who loved peace and followed peace, and who loved men and brought them near to the law." Yet even under the Gospel S. Gregory complains, <sup>9</sup> "The world is full of priests; yet in the harvest of God the labourers are few. For we undertake the priestly office, but do not fulfil its work. We receive the fruit of holy Church in daily stipend, but labour not for the everlasting Church in preaching." <sup>10</sup> "There are many priests," says a writer in the IVth cent., "and few priests; many in name, few in deed. See then, how ye sit on your thrones; for the throne maketh not the priest, but the priest the throne; the place sanctifieth not the man, but the man the place. Whoso sitteth well on the throne, receiveth honour from the throne; whoso ill, doth injustice to the throne. Thou sittest in judgement. If thou livest well and teachest well, thou wilt be a judge of all; if thou teachest well and livest ill, thine own only. For by teaching well and living well thou instructest the people, how it ought to live; by teaching well and living ill, thou teachest God, how He should condemn thee." <sup>11</sup> "We who are called priests, above the ills which we have of our own, add also the deaths of others. For we slay as many as we, in tepidity and silence, see daily go to death.—He who is placed under thee dies without thee, when in that which causes his death, thou hast withstood him. For to that death, which thou hast not withstood, thou wilt be added."

7. For the priest's lips should keep knowledge. <sup>12</sup> He assigns the reason for what he had just said, the law of truth was in his mouth; they had done what it was their duty to do; as in Ecclesiasticus it is said of Aaron; <sup>13</sup> God gave unto him His commandments, and authority in the statutes of judgements, that he should teach Jacob the testimonies, and inform Israel in His laws.' So S. Paul requires of Titus to ordain such Bishops, as shall be able to <sup>14</sup> exhort by sound doctrine and to convince gainsayers. Wherefore S. Ambrose <sup>15</sup> calls the Bible, which contains the law of God, 'the book of priests,' as specially belonging to them, to be specially studied by them. S. Jerome notes that he says keep, not 'give forth,' that they should speak seasonably, and give their fellow-servants meat in due season."

For he is the messenger [or angel] of the Lord of hosts. Malachi gives to the priest the title which belongs to the lowest order of the heavenly spirits, as having an office akin to theirs; as Haggai does to the prophet<sup>16</sup>, as an extraordinary messenger of God; and S. Paul tells the Galatians, <sup>17</sup> ye received me as an angel of God, as Christ Jesus; and Christ, by S. John, speaks to the Bishops of the seven Churches, good or bad, or of mixed good and bad, as the angels<sup>18</sup> of those Churches.

<sup>19</sup> Since in the heavenly hierarchy the order of Angels is the lowest, and in the Eucharistical hierarchy the order of the priesthood is the highest," <sup>20</sup> most truly is the priest of God called angel, i. e. messenger, because he intervenes between God and man, and announces the things of God to the people; and therefore were the Urim and Thummim placed on the priest's breast-plate of judgement, that we might learn, that the priest ought to be learned, a herald of Divine truth." Much more in the New Testament. <sup>21</sup> Who, as it were in a day, can form one of earth, to be the defender of truth, to stand with angels, to give glory with Archangels, to transmit the sacrifices to the altar above, to be partaker of the priesthood<sup>22</sup> of Christ, to reform the thing formed, and present the image, to re-create for the world above, to be a god<sup>23</sup> and make men partakers of the Divine Nature<sup>24</sup>?" <sup>25</sup> The priesthood is enacted on earth, but is ranked with the heavenly ranks. Very rightly. For not man, not angel, not archangel, not any other created power, but the Paraclete Himself hath ordained this office, and persuaded them, while yet abiding in the flesh, to conceive the ministry of the Angels. Wherefore, he who is consecrated as priest, ought to be pure, as if he stood among the heavenly powers." <sup>26</sup> The throne of the priesthood is placed in the heavens, and he is entrusted with ministering things of heaven. Who saith this? The King of heaven Himself. For He saith, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven.—So the priest standeth in the middle between God and human nature, bringing down to us Divine benefits, and transmitting thither our supplications."

8. But ye are departed out of the way <sup>27</sup> of knowledge, truth, equity, fear of God, which I appointed to Aaron and the Levites." Ye have caused many to stumble at the law. He does not simply say, in the law, but at it. The law was what they stumbled at. They did not only misunderstand the law, through the false teaching of the priests, as though it allowed things which in truth were sins (although this too); itself was their source of stumbling. As Jesus Himself was a rock of offence whereon they stumbled, because through His Divine holiness He was not what they expected Him to be, so contrariwise the law became an offence to them through the unholiness and inconsistency of the lives and ways of those who taught it; much as we now hear Christianity spoken against, because of the inconsistency of Christians. So S. Paul saith to the Jews, <sup>1</sup> The name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is written; and, for the sins of Eli's sons<sup>2</sup>, men abhorred the offering of the Lord.

And have corrupted the covenant of Levi; as it is said in Nehemiah, <sup>3</sup> They have defiled the priesthood, and the covenant of the priesthood and of Levi, that covenant which was life and peace<sup>4</sup>, and therefore forfeited them.

9. Therefore have I made you contemptible. They had said in their hearts, <sup>5</sup> The table of the Lord is contemptible. So God would requite them <sup>6</sup> "measure for measure." Yet not only so, but in their office as judges, against the repeated protestations in the law, <sup>7</sup> Thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honour the person of the mighty, in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour; <sup>8</sup> ye shall not respect persons in judgement; <sup>9</sup> thou shalt not wrest judgement, he says,

Ye have accepted persons in the law. You have interpreted the law differently for rich and poor, or have put it in force against the poor, not against the rich. It would include actual bribery; but there are many more direct offences against equal justice. How differently is the like offence against the eighth commandment visited upon the poor who have real temptation to it, and the rich who have none, but the lust of the eyes!

"Crows he condones, vexes the simple dove."

That contempt which they cast upon God and His law, by wresting it out of respect to persons, so that they might gain favour and respect from them, thus honouring them more than Him, and seeking to please them more than Him, will He cast back on them, making them contemptible even in the eyes of those, from whom they thought by that means to find respect.

10. Have we not all one Father<sup>10</sup>? Hath not one God created us? Malachi turns abruptly to another offence, in which also the priests set an evil example, the capricious dismissal of their Hebrew wives and taking other women in their stead. Here, as before, he lays down, at the outset, a general moral principle, which he applies. The one Father, (it appears from the parallel), is manifestly Almighty God, as the Jews said to our Lord, <sup>11</sup> We have one Father, even God.

<sup>10</sup> Jews (Ibn E., Tanchum, Kim. Abarb. ap. Poc.) have understood the one father to be Jacob; S. Cyril, to be Abraham. The parallelism is, I think, decisive against both. Although Abraham is specially spoken of as their father, yet the appeal to that relation would not hold against the marriage, condemned here, since he was the father of the descendants of Ishmael as of Isaac, of the bitterest foes of Israel, the heathenish Edomites. <sup>n</sup> Eph. 4. 6.

He created them, not only as He did all mankind, but by the spiritual relationship with Himself, into which He brought them. So Isaiah speaks, <sup>12</sup> Thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and He that formed thee, O Israel. Every one that is called by My Name; I have created him for My glory; I have formed him; yea I have made him. This people have I formed for Myself; they shall shew forth My praise. And from the first in Moses' song, <sup>13</sup> Is not He thy Father that created<sup>14</sup> thee? Hath He not made thee and established thee? This creation of them by God, as His people, gave them a new existence, a new relation to each other; so that every offence against each other was a violation of their relation to God, Who had given them this unity, and was, in a nearer sense than of any other, the common Father of all. Why then, the prophet adds, do we deal treacherously, a man against his brother, to profane the covenant of our fathers? He does not yet say, wherein this treacherous dealing consisted; but awakens them to the thought, that sin against a brother is sin against God, Who made him a brother; as, and much more under the Gospel, in which we are all members of one mystical body; <sup>15</sup> when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. He speaks of the sin, as affecting those who did not commit it. Why do we deal treacherously? So Isaiah, before his lips were cleansed by the mystical coal, said, <sup>16</sup> *I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, and the high-priest Joshua was shewn in the vision, clothed with defiled garments<sup>17</sup>; and the sin of Achan became the sin of the children of Israel<sup>18</sup>, and David's sinful pride in numbering the people was visited upon all<sup>19</sup>. He teaches beforehand, that, <sup>20</sup> whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it, or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it. They profaned also the covenant of their fathers, by marrying those whom God forbade, and who would seduce, as heathen wives had Solomon, from His worship. S. Paul in sanctioning the remarriage of widows, adds, only<sup>21</sup> in the Lord, i.e. Christian husbands. <sup>22</sup> *He who treated as null the difference between the Israelites and a heathen woman, shewed that the difference between the God of Israel and the God of the heathen had before become null to him, whence it follows;

11. Treacherously has Judah dealt; an abomination is committed in Israel. The prophet, by the order of the words, emphasises the treachery and the abomination. This have they done; the very contrary to what was required of them as the people of God. He calls the remnant of Judah by the sacred name of the whole people, of whom they were the surviving representatives. The word "abomination<sup>23</sup>" is a word belonging to the Hebrew, and is used especially of things offensive to, or separating from, Almighty God; and Moab, inveterate persecutors of Israel, were his near kindred. Ammonitesses and Moabitesses were as much forbidden by Ezra (ix. 2) as women of the different nations of Canaan, Ashdod or Egypt.

12 The LORD will cut off the man that doeth this, || the master and the scholar, out of the tabernacles of Jacob, and him that offereth an offering unto the LORD of hosts.

13 And this have ye done again, coveridolatry, as the central dereliction of God, and involving offences against the laws of nature, but also all other sins, as adultery, which violate His most sacred laws and alienate from Him.

Hath profaned the holiness of the Lord which He loved, in themselves, who had been separated and set apart by God to Himself as a <sup>1</sup>holy nation. <sup>2</sup>Israel was holiness to the Lord. <sup>3</sup>The Lord is holy, perfect holiness; His name, holy; all things relating to Him, holy; His law, covenant and all His ordinances and institutions holy; Israel, His peculiar people, an holy people; the temple and all things therein consecrated to Him, holy; Jerusalem, the city of the great God, holy; yea, the whole land of His inheritance, holy; so that whosoever doth not observe those due respects which to any of these belong, may be said to have profaned the holiness which He loved.

Unlawful marriages and unlawful lusts were in themselves a special profanation of that holiness. The high priest was to take a virgin of his own people to wife, and not to profane his seed among the people. The priests who married strange wives, defiled the priesthood and the covenant of the priesthood<sup>5</sup>. The marriage with idolatresses brought, as one consequence, the profanation by their idolatries. The prohibition is an anticipation of the fuller revelation in the Gospel, that the body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, and so, that sins against the body are profanations of the temple of God. <sup>6</sup>As those who acknowledge, worship and serve the true God are called His sons and daughters, so they that worshipped any strange god are, by like reason, here called the daughters of that god. Hence the Jews say, <sup>7</sup>He that marrieth a heathen woman is, as if he made himself son-in-law to an idol.

Hath married the daughter of a strange god. And so he came into closest relation with idols and with devils.

12. The Lord will cut off the man that doeth this, the master and the scholar, lit. The Lord cut off from the man that doeth this, watcher<sup>9</sup> and answerer. A proverbial saying apparently, in which the two corresponding classes comprise the whole<sup>10</sup>. Yet so, probably, that the one is the active agent; the other, the passive. The one as a watcher goes his rounds, to see that nothing stirreth against that which he is to guard; the other answereth, when roused. Together, they express the two opposite classes, active and passive sin; those who originate the sin, and those who adopt or retain it at the instigation of the inventor or active propagator of it. It will not exempt from punishment, that he was led into the sin.

And him that offereth an offering unto the Lord of hosts; i.e. him, who, doing these things, offereth an offering to God, to bribe Him, as it were, to connivance at his sin. In the same meaning, Isaiah says, that God hateth <sup>11</sup>iniquity and the solemn meeting, and, <sup>12</sup>I hate robbery with burnt-offering; or Solomon, <sup>13</sup>The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord; <sup>14</sup>he that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, his prayer shall be an abomination. And God by Amos says, <sup>15</sup>I hate, I despise, your feast-days, and will not accept your solemn assemblies. In one sense the sacrifice was an aggravation, in that the worship of God made the offence either a sin against light, or implied that God might be bribed into connivance in the breaking of His laws. The ancient discipline of removing from Communion those guilty of grievous sin was founded on this principle.

13. And this ye have done again, adding the second sin of cruelty to their wives to the taking foreign women; they covered the altar of God with tears, in that they by ill-treatment occasioned their wives to weep there to God; and God regarded this, as though they had stained the altar with their tears.

Insomuch that He regardeth not the offering any more. God regarded the tears of the oppressed, not the sacrifices of the oppressors. He would not accept what was thus offered Him as a thing well-pleasing <sup>16</sup>to Him, acceptable to win His good pleasure.

14. And ye say, Wherefore? They again act the innocent, or half-ignorant. What had they to do with their wives' womanly tears? He Who knows the hearts of all was Himself the witness between them and the wife of youth of each; her to whom, in the first freshness of life and their young hearts, each had plighted his troth, having been entrusted by her with her earthly all. <sup>17</sup>The Lord, said even Laban, when parting from his daughters, watch between me and thee, when we are absent, the one from the other; if thou shalt afflict my daughters, or if thou shalt take wives beside my daughters, no man is with us; see, God is witness between me and thee.

And he dealt treacherously against her, violating his own faith and her trusting love, which she had given once for all, and could not now retract. And she is thy companion; she has been another self, the companion of thy life, sharing thy sorrows, joys, hopes, fears, interests; different in strength, yet in all, good and ill, sickness and health, thy associate and

And wherefore one? Seeking a seed of God, i.e. worthy of God; for from religious marriage, religious offspring may most be hoped from God; and by violating that law, those before the flood brought in a spurious, unsanctified generation, so that God in His displeasure destroyed them all. And take heed to your spirit<sup>3</sup>, which ye too had from God, which was His, and which He willed in time to create. He closes, as he began, with an appeal to man's natural feeling, let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.

16. He hateth putting away<sup>10</sup>. He had allowed it for the hardness of their hearts, yet only in the one case of some extreme bodily foulness<sup>11</sup>, discovered upon marriage, and which the woman, knowing the law, concealed at her own peril. Not subsequent illness or any consequences of it, however loathsome (as leprosy), were a ground of divorce, but only this concealed foulness, which the husband found upon marriage. The capricious tyrannical divorce, God saith, He hateth: a word<sup>12</sup> naturally used only as to sin, and so stamping such divorce as sin.

One covereth violence with his garment<sup>13</sup>, or, and violence covereth his garment<sup>14</sup>, or, it might be, in the same sense, he covereth his garment with violence<sup>15</sup>, so that it cannot be hid, nor washed away, nor removed, but envelopes him and his garment; and that, to his shame and punishment. It was, as it were, an outer garment of violence, as Asaph says, <sup>16</sup>violence covereth them as a garment; or David, <sup>17</sup>he clothed himself with cursing as with a garment. It was like a garment with fretting leprosy, unclean and making unclean, to be burned with fire<sup>18</sup>. Contrariwise, the redeemed saints had <sup>19</sup>washed their robes and made them white in the Blood of the Lamb. Having declared God's hatred of this their doing, he sums up in the same words, but more briefly; and this being so, ye shall take heed to your spirit, and not deal treacherously.

17. Ye have wearied the Lord with your words. <sup>20</sup>By your blasphemous words, full of unbelief and mistrust, you have in a manner wearied God. He speaks of God, after the

<sup>13</sup> No Jewish-Arabic writer notices the meaning, which Pococke suggested, and Gesenius, Furst, Ewald follow; as if לבוש signified "wife," because in the Koran לבא is used, not directly for 'husband' or 'wife,' but in its original sense, "covering," of each reciprocally, (תן לבאם לכם ואתם לבאם להם) "they (your wives) are a garment to you, and you are a garment to them." So Abimelech said to Sarah, "he [Abraham] is to thee a covering (כסוי) of the eyes, unto all which are with thee," (Gen. xx. 16). But לבא does not signify, either husband or wife. In Arabic, حلة and ثياب loose dresses, (See Lane Arab. Lex. p. 53, 621) are used metaph. of a wife; (ثياب also of a person's self or family as well). But there is no trace of this in Heb.

<sup>14</sup> According to the constr., Nu. xvi. 33, Lev. iv. 8, Job xxi. 26, where the thing covering is the nominative and by is put before the thing covered. So Vulg. and LXX. originally, as shewn by the Arabic transl., though now the LXX. has ἐνδύματα for ἐνδύματα. (De Dieu) companion; the help meet for the husband and provided for him by God in Paradise; and above all, the wife of thy covenant, to whom thou didst pledge thyself before God. These are so many aggravations of their sin. She was the wife of their youth, of their covenant, their companion; and God was the witness and Sanctifier of their union. Marriage was instituted and consecrated by God in Paradise. Man was to leave father and mother (if so be), but to cleave to his wife indissolubly. For they were to be <sup>1</sup>no more twain, but one flesh. Hence, as a remnant of Paradise, even the heathen knew of marriage, as a religious act, guarded by religious sanctions. Among God's people, marriage was a <sup>2</sup>covenant of their God. To that original institution of marriage he seems to refer in the following;

15. And did not He, God, of Whom he had spoken as the witness between man and his wife, make one, viz. Adam first, to mark the oneness of marriage and make it a law of nature, appointing "that out of man (created in His own image and similitude,) woman should take her beginning, and, knitting them together, did teach that it should never be lawful to put asunder those, whom He by matrimony had made one<sup>3</sup>?" "4 Between those two, and consequently between all other married, to be born from them, He willed that there should be one indivisible union; for Adam could be married to no other save Eve, since no other had been created by God, nor could Eve turn to any other man than Adam, since there was no other in the world. 'Infringe not then this sanction of God, and unity of marriage, and degenerate not from your first parents, Adam and Eve.'"<sup>5</sup> "6 If divorce had been good, Jesus says, God would not have made one man and one woman, but, having made one Adam, would have made two women, had He meant that he should cast out the one, bring in the other; but now by the mode of creation, He brought in this law, that each should have, throughout, the wife which he had from the beginning. This law is older than that about divorce, as much as Adam is older than Moses."

Yet had he the residue of the spirit; <sup>6</sup>the breath of life, which He breathed into Adam, and man became a living soul. All the souls, which God would ever create, are His, and He could have called them into being at once. Yet in order to designate the unity of marriage, He willed to create but one.

manner of men, as a man afflicted by the ills of others. Whence also the Lord says in Isaiah, <sup>1</sup> I am weary to bear them, and <sup>2</sup> thou hast made Me to serve with thy sins; thou hast wearied Me with thine iniquities. In like way the Apostle says, <sup>3</sup> Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God."

With the same contumacy as before, and unconsciousness of sin, they ask, Wherein? It is the old temptation at the prosperity of the wicked. "Does God love the wicked? if not, why does He not punish them?" "The people, when returned from Babylon, seeing all the nations around, and the Babylonians themselves, serving idols but abounding in wealth, strong in body, possessing all which is accounted good in this world, and themselves, who had the knowledge of God, overwhelmed with want, hunger, servitude, is scandalised and says, 'There is no providence in human things; all things are borne along by blind chance, and not governed by the judgement of God; nay rather, things evil please Him, things good displease Him; or if God does discriminate all things, where is His equitable and just judgement?' Questions of this sort minds, which believe not in the world to come, daily raise to God, when they see the wicked in power, the saints in low estate; such as Lazarus, whom we read of in the Gospel, who, before the gate of the rich man in his purple, desires to support his hungry soul with the crumbs which are thrown away from the remnants of the table, while the rich man is of such savagery and cruelty, that he had no pity on his fellow-man, to whom the tongues of the dogs shewed pity; not understanding the time of judgement, nor that those are the true goods, which are for ever, say, He is pleased with the evil, and, Where is the God of judgement?"

Where is the God of the judgement? "i. e. of that judgement, the great, most certain, most exact, clear-sighted, omniscient, most just, most free, wherein He regards neither powerful nor rich nor gifts, nor aught but justice? For He is the God of the judgement, to Whom it belongs by nature to judge all men and things by an exact judgement: for His nature is equity itself, justice itself, providence itself, and that, most just, most wise.—To Him it belongs to be the Judge of all, and to exercise strict judgement upon all; and He will exercise it fully on that decisive and last day of the world, which shall be the horizon between this life and the next, parting off time from eternity, heaven from hell, the blessed from the damned for ever, through Christ, Whom He constituted Judge of all, quick and dead."

III. 1. God answers their complaints of the absence of His judgements, that they would come, but would include those also who clamoured for them. For no one who knew his own sinfulness would call for the judgement of God, as being himself, chief of sinners. S. Augustine pictures one saying to God, "Take away the ungodly man," and that God answers, "Which?"

Behold, I send My messenger before My face, and he shall prepare My way before Me. They, then, were not prepared for His Coming, for Whom they clamoured. The messenger is the same whom Isaiah had foretold, whose words Malachi uses <sup>6</sup>; <sup>7</sup> The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a high-way for our God. <sup>8</sup> Thou, child, was the prophecy on S. John Baptist's birth, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest; for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare His way, to give knowledge of salvation unto His people, for the remission of their sins. Repentance was to be the preparation for the kingdom of Christ, the Messiah, for Whom they looked so impatiently.

He Who speaks, is He Who should come, God the Son. For it was before Him Who came and dwelt among us, that the way was to be prepared. He speaks here in His Divine Nature, as the Lord Who should send, and Who should Himself come in our flesh. In the Gospel, when He was come in the flesh, He speaks not of His own Person but of the Father, since <sup>9</sup> indivisible are the operations of the Trinity, and what the One doth, the other Two do, since the Three are of one nature power and operation." Whence Christ, in order to give no excuse to the Jews to speak against Him before the time, refers it, as He does His life<sup>10</sup>, His doctrine<sup>11</sup>, words<sup>12</sup> and works<sup>13</sup> to the Father.

"<sup>14</sup> Those works, which do not relate to that which belongs peculiarly to each Person, being common, are ascribed now to One Person, now to Another, in order to set forth the One Substance in the Trinity of Persons." Thus, S. John says<sup>15</sup>, Isaiah spoke of the unbelief of the Jews, when he saw the glory of God the Son and spake of Him, and S. Paul says<sup>16</sup> that the Holy Ghost spake then by him.

And he shall prepare the way before Me. "<sup>17</sup> The same is God's way here, and Christ's there, an evident proof that Christ is one God with the Father, and that, in Christ, God came and was manifest in the flesh." The prophets and all who turned men to righteousness, or who retained the knowledge of the truth or of righteousness or of God in the world, did, in their degree, prepare the way for Christ. But John was His immediate forerunner before His Face, the herald of His immediate approach; whence he is called "<sup>18</sup> the end of the law, and the beginning of the Gospel," "<sup>19</sup> the lamp before the Light, the voice before the Word, the mediator between the Old and the New Testament;" "<sup>20</sup> the link of the law and of grace; a new morning star; a ray, before the true Sun should burst forth," the end of night, the beginning of day.

And the Lord, Whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to His temple. He, Whose Coming they sought for, was Almighty God, the God of Judgement<sup>21</sup>. He Who should come, was the Lord, again Almighty God, since, in usage too, none else is called "the Lord," as none else can be. The temple also, to which He was to come, the temple of God, is His own. The messenger, or the Angel of the covenant, plainly, even from the parallelism, is the same as the Lord. It was one, for whom they looked; one, of whose absence they complained; <sup>2</sup> where is the God of judgement? one, who should come to His temple <sup>3</sup>; one, whose coming they sought and prepared to have pleasure in <sup>4</sup>; one, of whom it is repeated, lo, He cometh <sup>5</sup>; one, in the day of whose coming, at whose appearing, it was asked, who shall stand? <sup>6</sup> "All Christian interpreters are agreed that this Lord is Christ, <sup>7</sup> Whom God hath made both Lord and Christ, and <sup>8</sup> Who is Lord over all; by Whom all things were made, are sustained and governed; Who is (as the root of the word <sup>9</sup> imports) the basis and foundation, not of any private family, tribe or kingdom, but of all; <sup>10</sup> by Whom are all things and we by Him: and Whose we are also by right of redemption; and so He is <sup>11</sup> Lord of lords and King of kings, deservedly called the Lord." As then the special presence of God was often indicated in connection with the Angel of the Lord, so, here, He Who was to come was entitled the Angel or messenger of the covenant, as God also calls Him the covenant itself, <sup>12</sup> I will give Thee for a covenant of the people, a light of the Gentiles. He it was, <sup>13</sup> the Angel of His Presence, Who saved His former people, in Whom His Name was, and Who, by the prerogative of God, would <sup>14</sup> not pardon their transgressions. He should be <sup>15</sup> the Mediator of the new and better covenant which is promised; <sup>16</sup> not according to the covenant, that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt, which My covenant they brake, although I was a husband unto them, saith the Lord; but this shall be the covenant, that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord, I will put My law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and will be their God and they shall be My people.

Whom ye seek, are seeking, Whom ye delight in, i.e. profess so to do; He will come, but will be very different from Him whom ye look for, an Avenger on your enemies. Judgement will come, but it will begin with yourselves.

Shall suddenly come, <sup>17</sup> "unawares, when men should not think of them; whence perhaps it is that the Jews reckon the Messiah among what shall come unawares" <sup>18</sup>. As, it is here said of His first Coming, so it is said of His second Coming, (which may be comprehended under this here spoken of) that except they diligently watch for it, <sup>19</sup> it shall come upon them and His Shechinah shall dwell there; and this is what they sought in their murmurings." In the "Mashmia' yeshu' ah," "he says, 'Haadon may be explained of the king Messiah.' Kimchi also gives it as his first explanation; 'Haadon, he is the king Messiah, and he is the angel of the covenant;' but he gives an alternative explanation, 'or he calls Elijah the messenger of the covenant.' Saadiah Gaon admits the 'Me,' before whom the messenger is sent, to be the Messiah b. David. 'The forerunner of the Messiah b. David will be like his ambassador, and as one who prepareth the people, and cleareth the way, as in what is said, Behold I send &c.'" Sopher Haemunoth Tr. 8 de redemptione, (quoted by Voisin on the P. F. f. 127.) The author of the older Nizzachon (whether seriously or to have something to say) said, "He is sent and is not God." Wagenseil p. 126. Tanchum says, "they are promised a time, in which transgressors will be requited with a swift retribution by the just king whom God will raise up to the rule, and he is the king Messiah."

The Jews are agreed also that the messenger is no ordinary person. Ibn Ezra supposes him to be the Messiah b. Joseph, holding accordingly that he, before whose face he should come, was the Messiah ben David: Kimchi, that it was an angel from heaven (as in Ex. xxiii. 20.) to guard them in the way. But to guard in the way is not to prepare the way before him; Raashi and the author of the Abkath rochel, "the angel of death who should clear away the wicked;" Abarbanel, that it was Malachi himself; but he who is promised through Malachi, was yet to come.

Lo, He will come: he insists again and calls their minds to that Coming, certain, swift, new, wonderful, on which all eyes should be set, but His Coming would be a sifting-time.

2. And who may abide the day of His coming? And who shall stand when He appeareth? The implied answer is, "No one;" as in the Psalm, <sup>22</sup> If Thou, Lord, wilt mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? Joel had asked the same, <sup>23</sup> The day of the Lord is great and very terrible; and who can abide it? "How can the weakness of man endure such might; his blindness, such light; his frailty, such power; his uncleanness, such holiness; the chaff, such a fire? For He is like a refiner's fire. Who would not fail through stupefaction, fear, horror, shrinking reverence, from such majesty?"

Malachi seems to blend, as Joel, the first and second coming of our Lord. The first Coming too was a time of sifting and severance, according as those, to whom He came, did or did not receive Him. The severance was not final, because there was yet space for repentance; but it was real, an earnest of the final judgement. <sup>25</sup> For judgement, our Lord says, I am come into this world, that they which see not may see, and they which see might be made blind; and again, <sup>26</sup> Now is the judgement of this world; and, <sup>27</sup> He that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed on the name of the Only-Begotten Son of God; <sup>28</sup> He that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. As, on the other hand, He saith, <sup>29</sup> whoso eateth My Flesh and drinketh My Blood hath eternal life; and <sup>30</sup> he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; "hath," He saith; not, "shall have;" hath it, in present reality and earnest, though he may forfeit it: so the other class is condemned already, although the one may repent and be saved, the other may <sup>31</sup> turn from his righteousness and commit iniquity; and if he persevere in it, shall die therein. It is then one ever-present judgement. Every soul of man is in a state of grace or out of it; in God's favour or under His wrath; and the judgement of the Great Day, in which the secrets of men's hearts shall be revealed, will be but an outward manifestation of that now hidden judgement. But the words, in their fullest sense, imply a passing of that judgement, in which men do or do not stand, as in those of our Lord, <sup>32</sup> As a snare shall that day come on all those that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things which shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man; and S. Paul, <sup>1</sup> Take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand; and in the Revelation, <sup>2</sup> They said to the mountains and rocks; Fall on us, and hide us from the wrath of Him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of His wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand? Asaph says of a temporal, yet, for this life, final destruction; <sup>3</sup> At Thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse are cast into a deep sleep. Thou art to be feared, and who may stand in Thy sight, when Thou art angry?

For He is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap. Two sorts of materials for cleansing are mentioned, the one severe, where the baser materials are inworked with the rich ore; the other mild, where the defilement is easily separable. <sup>4</sup> He shall come like a refining fire; <sup>5</sup> a fire shall burn before Him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about Him. Then He shall call the heaven from above, and the earth, that He may judge His people; streams of fire shall sweep before, bearing away all sinners. For the Lord is called a fire, and a <sup>6</sup> consuming fire, so as to burn our <sup>7</sup> wood, hay, stubble. And not fire only, but fuller's soap <sup>8</sup>. To those who sin heavily, He is a refining and consuming fire, but to those who commit light sins, fuller's soap, to restore cleanness to it, when washed. <sup>9</sup> Yet, though light in comparison, this too had its severity; for clothes which were washed (of which the word is used) were trampled <sup>9</sup> on by the feet. <sup>10</sup> The nitrum and the fuller's soap is penitence. Yet the whiteness and purity so restored, is, at the last, perfected. Inspiration could find no more adequate comparison for us, for the brightness of our Lord's raiment from the glory of the Transfiguration, than, <sup>11</sup> exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them.

Our Lord is, in many ways, as a fire. He says of Himself; <sup>12</sup> I am come to send a fire upon earth, and what will I, if it be already kindled? S. John Baptist said of Him, <sup>13</sup> He shall baptise you with the Holy Ghost and with fire. He kindles in the heart "a fire of love," which softens what is hard, will

But as God is a consuming fire, Who must burn out the dross, unless we be <sup>15</sup> reprobate silver which the founder melteth in vain, either He must, by His grace, consume the sin within us, or must consume us with it, in hell.

3. And He shall sit <sup>16</sup>, as a King and Judge on His throne, with authority, yet also to try accurately the cause of each, separating seeming virtues from real graces; hypocrites, more or less consciously, from His true servants.

He shall purify <sup>17</sup> the sons of Levi. These had been first the leaders in degeneracy, the corrupters of the people by their example and connivance. Actually <sup>18</sup> a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith. Barnabas also was a Levite <sup>19</sup>. But more largely, as Zion and Jerusalem are the titles for the Christian Church, and Israel who believed was the true Israel, so the sons of Levi are the true Levites, the Apostles and their successors in the Christian priesthood.

It was through three centuries of persecutions that the Church was purified by fire.

That they may offer, lit. and they shall be unto the Lord offerers of a meal-offering in righteousness, i. e. they shall be such, and that, habitually, abidingly. Again, here and in the next words, and the meal-offering of Judah shall be pleasant unto the Lord, it is remarkable, that the meal-offering, to which the Holy Eucharist corresponds, is alone mentioned. Of bloody offerings Malachi is silent; for they were to cease.

In righteousness, as Zacharias prophesied, that we might serve Him in holiness and righteousness before Him all the days of our life.

4. Then [And] shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem. The law, the new revelation of God, was to <sup>20</sup> go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Judah and Jerusalem then are here the Christian Church. They shall be pleasant [lit. sweet] unto the Lord. It is a reversal [using the self-same word] of what God had said of them in the time of their religious decay, <sup>21</sup> they shall not offer wine-offerings to the Lord, neither shall they be sweet unto Him; <sup>22</sup> your burnt-offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto Me.

As in the days of old, before the days of degeneracy; as it stands in the ancient Liturgies, <sup>23</sup> Vouchsafe to look upon them [the consecrated oblations] with a propitious and serene Countenance, and to accept them, as Thou vouchsafedst to accept the gifts of Thy righteous Abel and the sacrifice of our Patriarch Abraham, and the holy sacrifice, the immaculate offering, which Thy high priest Melchisedec

As Thou didst receive this true worship from the hand of Thine Apostle, so, in Thy goodness, receive also from us sinners the gift which lie before Thee, and grant that our oblation may be acceptable, hallowed in the Holy Spirit &c." offered unto Thee." "The oblation of the sacrament of the Eucharist, made by the Jews who should believe in Christ, which is known to have been first instituted by Christ in the city of Jerusalem, and afterwards to have been continued by His disciples<sup>2</sup>, shall be pleasing unto the Lord, as the sacrifices of the Patriarchs, Melchisedec, Abraham, and the holy priests in the law, as Aaron; yea, the truth takes precedence of the figure and shadow; the sacrifice of the new law is more excellent and acceptable to God, than all the sacrifices of the law or before the law. With this agrees what the Lord saith to the synagogues, <sup>3</sup> I will turn My hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin; and I will restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counsellors as at the beginning: and the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed." So now it follows;

5. And I will come near to you to judgement. They had clamoured for the coming of the God of judgement; God assures them that He will come to judgement, which they had desired, but far other than they look for. The few would be purified; the great mass of them (so that He calls them you), the main body of those who had so clamoured, would find that He came as a Judge, not for them but against them.

And I will be a swift witness. "In judging I will bear witness, and witnessing, I, the Same, will bring forth judgement, saith the Lord; therefore the judgement shall be terrible, since the judge is an infallible witness, whom the conscience of no one will be able to contradict."

God would be a swift witness, as He had said before, He shall come suddenly. Our Lord calls Himself the Faithful and True witness, when He stands in the midst of the Church, as their Judge. God's judgements are always unexpected by those, on whom they fall. The sins are those specially condemned by the law; the use of magical arts as drawing men away from God, the rest as sins of special malignity. Magical arts were rife at the time of the Coming of our Lord<sup>4</sup>; and adultery, as shewn in the history of the woman taken in adultery, when her accusers were convicted in their own consciences<sup>5</sup>.

Oppress the hireling, lit. oppress the hire, <sup>7</sup> i.e. deal oppressively in it. Behold, says S. James<sup>8</sup>, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is by you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. The mere delay in the payment of the wages of the labourer brought sin unto him, against whom he cried to God<sup>9</sup>. It is no light sin, since it is united with the heaviest, and is spoken of as reaching the ears of God. The widow and the fatherless stand in a relation of special nearness to God.

And fear not Me. He closes with the central defect, which was the mainspring of all their sins, the absence of the fear of God. The commission of any of these sins, rife as they unhappily are, proves that those who did them had no fear of God. "Nothing hinders that this should be referred to the first Coming of Christ. For Christ, in preaching to the Jews, exercised upon them a judgement of just rebuke, especially of the priests, Scribes and Pharisees, as the Gospels shew."

6. I am the Lord, I change not, better, more concisely, I, the Lord<sup>10</sup>, change not. The proper name of God, He Who Is, involves His Unchangeableness. For change implies imperfection; it changes to that which is either more perfect or less perfect: to somewhat which that being, who changes, is not or has not. But God has everything in Himself perfectly. "Thou Alone, O Lord, Art what Thou Art, and Thou Art Who Art. For what is one thing in the whole and another in parts, and wherein is anything subject to change, is not altogether what Is. And what beginneth from not being, and can be conceived, as not being, and only subsisteth through another thing, returns to not-being; and what hath a 'has been,' which now is not, and a 'to be,' which as yet is not, that is not, properly and absolutely. But Thou Art what Thou Art. For whatever Thou Art in any time or way, that Thou Art wholly and always; and Thou Art, Who Art properly and simply, because Thou hast neither 'to have been' or 'to be about to be;' but only to be present; and canst not be conceived, ever not to have been." "There is only one simple Good, and therefore One Alone Unchangeable, which is God."

Our life is a "becoming" rather than a simple "being;" it is a continual losing of what we had, and gaining what we had not; for "in as far as any one is not what he was, and is what he was not, so far forth he dieth and ariseth;" dieth to what he was, ariseth to be something otherwise.

"Increase evidences a beginning; decrease, death and destruction. And therefore Malachi says, I am God, and I change not, ever retaining His own state of being; because what has no origin cannot be changed."

So the Psalmist says, <sup>15</sup> As a vesture, Thou shalt change them and they shall be changed, but Thou art the Same, and Thy years shall not fail; and Balaam, controlled by God, when they commit adultery." Lightfoot subjoins, "The Gemarists teach that Johanan b. Zacchai was the author of that advice, who was still alive, in the Sanhedrin, and perhaps among those who brought the adulteress before Christ. For some things make it probable, that the Scribes and Pharisees, mentioned here, were elders of the Synagogue." S. Justin reproaches them with having fresh wives, wherever they went throughout the world. Dial. fin. p. 243. Oxf. Tr.

Of this unchangeableness of God, His holy ones partake, as far as they fix themselves on God. <sup>3</sup> "The soul of man hangs upon Him, by Whom it was made. And because it was made, to desire God Alone, but every thing which it desires below is less than He, rightly doth not that suffice it, which is not God. Hence is it, that the soul is scattered hither and thither, and is repelled from everything, toward which it is borne, through satiety of them. But holy men guard themselves by cautious observation, lest they should be relaxed from their intentness by change, and because they desire to be the same, wisely bind themselves to the thought, whereby they love God. For in the contemplation of the Creator, they will receive this, that they should ever enjoy one stability of mind. No changeableness then dissipates them, because their thought ever perseveres, free from unlikeness to itself. This therefore they now imitate, striving with effort, which hereafter they shall with joy receive as a gift. To which unchangeableness the prophet had bound himself by the power of love, when he said, <sup>4</sup> One thing I required of the Lord, which I will require, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord. To this unity Paul clave intently, when he said, <sup>5</sup> One thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind and stretching forth to those things which are before, I press forward toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

And ye sons of Jacob are not consumed. Man would often have become weary of man's wickedness and waywardness. We are impatient at one another, readily despair of one another. God might justly have cast off them and us; but He changes not. He abides by the covenant which He made with their fathers; He consumed them not; but with His own unchangeable love awaited their repentance. Our hope is not in ourselves, but in God.

7. Even from the days of your fathers. Back to those days and from them <sup>6</sup>, ye are gone away from My ordinances. <sup>7</sup> "I am not changed from good; ye are not changed from evil. I am unchangeable in holiness; ye are unchangeable in perversity."

Return unto Me. The beginning of our return is from the preventing grace of God. <sup>8</sup> Turn Thou me, and I shall be turned; for Thou art the Lord my God, is the voice of the soul to God, preparing for His grace; <sup>9</sup> turn us, O God of our salvation. For, not in its own strength, but by His grace can the soul turn to God. Turn thou to Me and I will return unto you, is the Voice of God, acknowledging our free-will, and promising His favour, if we accept His grace in return.

And ye say, Wherein shall we return? Strange ignorance of the blinded soul, unconscious that God has aught against it! It is the Pharisaic spirit in the Gospel. It would own itself doubtless in general terms a sinner, but when called on, wholly to turn to God, as being wholly turned from Him, it asks, "In what? What would God have of me?" as if ready to do it.

8. Shall a man rob or cheat, defraud God? God answers question by question, but thereby drives it home to the sinner's soul, and appeals to his conscience. The conscience is steeled, and answers again, In what? God specifies two things only, obvious, patent, which, as being material things, they could not deny. In tithes and offerings. The offerings included several classes of dues to God, a) the first fruits<sup>10</sup>; b) the annual half-shekel<sup>11</sup>; c) the offerings made for the tabernacle<sup>12</sup>, and the second temple<sup>13</sup> at its first erection; it is used of ordinary offerings<sup>14</sup>; d) of the tithes of their own tithes, which the Levites paid to the priests<sup>15</sup>; e) of the portions of the sacrifice which accrued to the priests<sup>16</sup>.

9. Ye have been cursed with the curse (not "with a curse"). The curse threatened had come upon them: but, as fore-supposed in Leviticus by the repeated burthen, If ye still walk contrary to Me, they had persevered in evil. God had already shewn His displeasure. But they, so far from being amended by it, were the more hardened in their sin. Perhaps as men do, they pleaded their punishment, as a reason why they should not amend. They defrauded God, under false pretences. They were impoverished by His curse, and so they could not afford to pay the tithes; as men say, "the times are bad; so we cannot help the poor" of Christ. And Me ye still are defrauding<sup>17</sup>; Me, ye; man, God. And that not one or other, but this whole people. It was a requital as to that, in which they had offended. <sup>18</sup> "Because ye have not rendered tithes and first-fruits, therefore ye are cursed in famine and penury." <sup>19</sup> "Because the people did not render tithes and first-fruits to the Levites, the Lord saith, that He Himself suffered fraud, Whose ministers, constrained by hunger and penury, deserted the temple. For, if He is visited by others in prison, and sick, is received and cared for, and, hungry and athirst, receives food and drink, why should He not receive tithes in His ministers, and, if they are not given, be Himself deprived of His portion?"

10. Bring the whole tithes, not a part only, keeping back more or less, and, as he had said, defrauding God, offering, like Ananias, a part, as if it had been the whole; into the treasury, where they were collected in the time of Hezekiah<sup>20</sup>, and again, at this time, by the direction of Nehemiah, so that there shall be food<sup>21</sup>, not superfluity, in My house, <sup>22</sup> for those who minister in the house of My sanctuary." <sup>23</sup> The Levites and singers had, before the reformation, fled every one to his field, because the portion of the Levites had not been given them. On Nehemiah's remonstrance, aided by Malachi, the tithe of corn and the wine and the new oil were brought into the treasuries.

Bring the whole tithes. "Thou knowest that all things which come to thee are God's, and dost not thou give of His own to the Creator of all? The Lord God needeth not: He asketh not a reward, but reverence: He asketh not any thing of thine, to restore to Him. He asketh of thee first-fruits and tithes. Niggard, what wouldest thou do, if He took nine parts to Himself, and left thee the tenth?—What if He said to thee; 'Man, thou art Mine, Who made thee; Mine is the land which thou tillest; Mine are the seeds, which thou sowest; Mine are the animals, which thou weariest: Mine are the showers, Mine the winds, Mine the sun's heat; and since Mine are all the elements, whereby thou livest, thou who givest only the labour of thine hands, deservest only the tithes.' But since Almighty God lovingly feeds us, He gives most ample reward to us who labour little: claiming to Himself the tithes only, He has condoned us all the rest."

And prove Me now herewith, in or by this thing. God pledges Himself to His creatures, in a way in which they themselves can verify. "If you will obey, I will supply all your needs; if not, I will continue your dearth." By whatever laws Gods orders the material creation, He gave them a test, of the completion of which they themselves could judge, of which they themselves must have judged. They had been afflicted with years of want. God promises them years of plenty, on a condition which He names. What would men think now, if any one had, in God's name, promised that such or such a disease, which injured our crops or our cattle, should come at once to an end, if any one of God's laws should be kept? We should have been held as fanatics, and rightly; for we had no commission of God. God authenticates those by whom He speaks; He promises, Who alone can perform.

"There be three keys which God hath reserved in His own hands, and hath not delivered to any to minister or substitute, the keys of life, of rain, and of the resurrection. In the ordering of the rain they look on His great power, no less than in giving life at first, or afterwards raising the dead to it; as S. Paul saith, God left not Himself without witness, in that He did good and gave rain from heaven and fruitful seasons."

If I will not open the windows of heaven. In the time of the flood, they were, as it were, opened, to man's destruction: now, God would rain abundantly for you, for their sakes. And pour you out, lit. empty out to you, give to them fully, holding back nothing. So in the Gospel it is said, that the love of God is shed abroad<sup>5</sup>, poured out and forth in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given to us.

That there be not room enough to receive it; lit. until there be no sufficiency<sup>6</sup>. The text does not express what should not suffice, whether it be on God's part or on man's. Yet it were too great irony, if understood of God. His superabundance, above all which we can ask or think, is a first principle in the conception of God, as the Infinite Source of all being. But to say of God, that He would pour out His blessing, until man could not contain it, is one bliss of eternity, that God's gifts will overflow the capacity of His creatures to receive them. The pot of oil poured forth the oil, until, on the prophet's saying, Bring me yet a vessel, the widow's son said, There is not a vessel more. And the oil stayed. God's gifts are limited only by our capacity to receive them.

11. And I will rebuke the devourer, the locust, caterpillar, or any like scourge of God. It might be, that when the rain watered the fields, the locust or caterpillar &c. might destroy the corn, so that the labours of man should perish; wherefore he adds, I will rebuke the devourer. Neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time, holding out a fair promise, but cut off by the frost-wind or the hail; the blossoms or the unripe fruit strewing the earth, as a token of God's displeasure.

12. All nations shall call you blessed. The promise goes beyond the temporal prosperity of their immediate obedience. Few could know or think much of the restored prolificness of Judæa; none could know of its antecedents. A people, as well as individuals, may starve, and none know of it. Had the whole population of Judah died out, their Persian masters would not have cared for it, but would have sent fresh colonists to replace them and pay the tribute to the great king. The only interest, which all nations could have in them, was as being the people of God, from whom He should come, the Desire of all nations, in Whom all the families of the earth would be blessed. Of this, God's outward favour was the earnest; they should have again the blessings which He had promised to His people.

And ye shall be called a delightful land, lit. a land of good pleasure. It was not so much the land as the people: ye shall be called. The land stands for the people upon it, in whom its characteristics lay. The river Jordan was not so bright as Abana and Pharpar: "the aspect of the shore" is the same, when the inhabitants are spiritually or morally dead; only the more beautiful, in contrast with the lifeless "spirit of man." So Isaiah says, The nations shall see thy

For the people who returned from Babylon seemed to have a knowledge of God, and to observe the law, and to understand their sin, and to offer sacrifices for sin; to pay tithes, to observe the sabbath, and the rest, commanded in the law of God, and seeing all the nations around them abounding in all things, and that they themselves were in penury hunger and misery, was scandalised and said, ‘What does it benefit me, that I worship the One True God, abominate idols, and, pricked with the consciousness of sin, walk mournfully before God?’ A topic, which is pursued more largely in the 73rd Psalm.” Only the Psalmist relates his temptations to God, and God’s deliverance of him from them; these adopted them and spake them against God. This is the judgement of the world, whereby worldlings think pious, just, sincere, strict men, vain, i.e. especially when they see them impoverished, despised, oppressed, afflicted, because they know not the true goods of virtue and eternal glory, but measure all things by sight sense and taste.—Truly, if the righteous had not hope of another and better life, in vain would they afflict themselves and bear the afflictions of others. For, as the Apostle says, If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now, hoping for another blessed and eternal life for the slight tribulations of this, we are the happiest of all men.”

their mouths the words of Psalmists, that they took the garb of mourners, going about mourning before God for their country’s afflictions.

15. And now we call the proud happy [blessed]. This being so, they sum up the case against God. God had declared that all nations should call them blessed<sup>9</sup>, if they would obey. They answer, using His words; And now we, (they lay stress on the word, <sup>10</sup> we), pronounce blessed, in fact, those whom God had pronounced cursed: <sup>11</sup> Thou hast rebuked the proud, who are cursed. Their characteristic, among other bad men, is of insolence<sup>12</sup>, arrogance, boiling over with self-conceit, and presumptuous towards God. The ground of Babylon’s sentence was, <sup>13</sup> she hath been proud towards the LORD, the Holy One of Israel; Jethro says of the Egyptians, as a ground of his belief in God, <sup>14</sup> for, in the thing that they dealt proudly, He was above them. It describes the character of the act of Israel, when God bade them not go up, neither fight, and they would not hear, and went up presumptuously into the battle<sup>15</sup>; the contumacious act of those, who, appealing to the judgement of God, afterwards refused it<sup>16</sup>; of Johanan’s associates, who accuse Jeremiah of speaking falsely in the name of God<sup>17</sup>; they are persons who rise up<sup>18</sup>, forge lies against<sup>19</sup>, dig pits for<sup>20</sup>, deal perversely with<sup>21</sup>, hold in derision<sup>22</sup>, oppress<sup>23</sup>, the pious. Whether or no, they mean specifically the heathen, those, whom these pronounced blessed, were those who were contemptuous towards God.

Yea, the workers of wickedness, those who habitually work it, whose employment it is, are built up; yea, they have tried God and have escaped. God had promised that, if <sup>24</sup> they will diligently learn the ways of My people, they shall be built up in the midst of My people; these say, the workers of wickedness had been built up: God had bidden themselves, <sup>25</sup> make trial of Me in this; these answer, the wicked had made trial of Him, and had been unpunished.

16. Then they that feared the LORD spake often among themselves. The proud-speaking of the ungodly called out the piety of the God-fearing. “<sup>26</sup> The more the ungodly spake against God, the more these spake among themselves for God.” Both went on till the great Day of severance. True, as those said, the distinction between righteous and wicked was not made yet, but it was stored up out of sight. They spake among themselves, strengthening each other against the ungodly sayings of the ungodly.

And the LORD hearkened and heard it. God, Whom these thought an idle looker-on, or regardless, all the while remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.

And a book of remembrance was written before Him. Kings had their chronicles written<sup>2</sup>, wherein men's good or ill deeds towards them were recorded. But the image is one of the oldest in Scripture, and in the self-same words, <sup>3</sup>the Lord said to Moses, Write this, a memorial in a book. God can only speak to us in our own language. One expression is not more human than another, since all are so. Since with God all things are present, and memory relates to the past, to speak of God as "remembering" is as imperfect an expression in regard to God, as to speak of "a book," "4 Forgettingness hath no place with God, because He is in no way changed; nor remembrance, because He forgetteth not." Both expressions are used, only to picture vividly to our minds, that our deeds are present with God, for good or for evil; and in the Day of Judgement He will make them manifest to men and angels, as though read out of a book, and will requite them. So Daniel had said, <sup>5</sup>the judgement was set, and the books were opened. And S. John says, <sup>6</sup>The books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. So Moses says to God, <sup>7</sup>If not, blot me out of Thy book which Thou hast written; and David, prophesying, prays, <sup>8</sup>Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written among the righteous; and our Lord bids His disciples, <sup>9</sup>Rejoice in this, that your names are written in heaven.

And that thought upon His name, rather, esteemed, prized, it, in contrast with those who <sup>10</sup>despised; as, of Christ, when He should come, it is said, <sup>11</sup>He was despised, and we esteemed Him not. "12 The thinking on His Name imports, not a bare thinking of, but a due esteem and awful regard of, so as with all care to avoid all things which may tend to the dishonour of it, as always in His presence and with respect to Him and fear of Him." "13 Those are meant who always meditate on the ways of the Lord and the knowledge of His Godhead; for His name is Himself, and He is His Name;" "14 the wise in heart who know the mystery of the awful glorious Name."

17. And they shall be Mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up My jewels<sup>15</sup>, or perhaps better, And they shall be to Me, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day which I make (or, in which I do this) a peculiar treasure<sup>16</sup>. "17 In the day of judgement, those who fear Me and believe and maintain My providence shall be to Me a peculiar treasure, i. e. a people peculiarly belonging and precious to Me, blessed in the vision and fruition of Me. For as in the old law, Israel was a peculiar treasure<sup>18</sup>, a special people<sup>19</sup> and inheritance of God, chosen out of all nations, so in the new law Christians, and those who are righteous through grace, are the special treasure of God, and in heaven shall be His special treasure in glory, possessed by God and possessing God." The peculiar treasure, is something, much prized, made great store of, and guarded. Such are Christians, bought at a great price, even by the precious Blood of Christ; but much more evidently such shall they be, Malachi says, in all eternity, which that Day of final retribution shall decide, "20 joying in the participation of their Creator, by Whose eternity they are fixed, by Whose truth they are assured, by Whose gift they are holy."

And I will spare them. It is a remarkable word, as used of those who should be to Him a peculiar treasure, teaching that, not of their own merits, they shall be such, but by His great mercy. It stands in contrast with the doom of the wicked, whom that day shall sentence to everlasting loss of God. Still, the saved also shall have needed the tender mercy<sup>21</sup> of God, whereby He pardoned their misdeeds and had compassion upon them. "22 If Thou, Lord, shalt lay up iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? Among those whom God will spare on that day, will be countless, whom the self-righteous despised as sinners. "23 I will spare them, although formerly sinners; I will spare them, repenting, and serving Me with the service of a pious confession, as a man spareth his own son which served him." For our Lord saith of the son, who refused to go work in his Father's vineyard, and afterwards repented and went, that he <sup>24</sup>did the will of his Father.

18. Then shall ye return, or turn, not, "return" in the sense of returning to God, for in that day will be the time of judgement, not of repentance; nor yet, "then shall ye again see;" for this is what they denied; and, if they had ceased to deny it, they would have been converted, not in that day, but before, when God gave them grace to see it. They shall turn, so as to have other convictions than before; but, as Judas. The Day of judgement will make a great change in earthly judgement. Last shall be first, and first last; this world's sorrow shall end in joy, and worldly joy in sorrow; afflictions shall be seen to be God's love: <sup>25</sup>Thou in very faithfulness hast afflicted me; and the unclouded prosperity of the ungodly to be God's abandonment of them. The picture of the surprise of the wicked in the Day of judgement, in the Wisdom of Solomon, is a comment on the Prophet. "26 Then shall the righteous man stand in great boldness before the face of such as have afflicted him, and made no account of his labours; when they see it, they shall be troubled with terrible fear, and

2 Pet. 3. 7.
ch. 8. 18.

FOR, behold, <sup>a</sup>the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all <sup>b</sup>the proud, shall be amazed with the strangeness of his salvation, so far beyond all they looked for: and they, repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit, shall say within themselves, This was he whom we had sometimes in derision and a proverb of reproach: we fools counted his life madness and his end to be without honour: how is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints!"

IV. 1. For, behold, the day cometh, which shall burn as an oven. He had declared the great severance of the God-fearing and the God-blaspheming, those who served and those who did not serve God; the righteous and the wicked; now he declares the way and time of the severance, the Day of Judgement. Daniel had described the fire of that day, <sup>1</sup>The throne [of the Ancient of days] was a fiery flame; his wheels a burning fire: a fiery stream issued and came forth from Him: the judgement was set and the books were opened. Fire is ever spoken of, as accompanying the judgement. <sup>2</sup>Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence, a fire shall devour before Him; <sup>3</sup>Behold the Lord will come with fire: for by fire and by the sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: every man's work shall be made manifest, for the Day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire: and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is. S. Peter tells us that fire will be of this burning world; <sup>4</sup>the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgement and perdition of ungodly men;—in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.

The oven, or furnace, pictures the intensity of the heat, which is white from its intensity, and darts forth, fiercely, shooting up like a living creature, and destroying life, as the flame of the fire of Nebuchadnezzar's <sup>5</sup>burning fiery furnace slew those men that took up Shadrach Meshach and Abednego. The whole world shall be one burning furnace.

And all the proud and all that do wickedly. All those, whom those murmurers pronounced blessed<sup>7</sup>, yea and all who should thereafter be like them (he insists on the universality of the judgement), every doer of wickedness, up to that day and those who should then be, shall be stubble. <sup>8</sup>"The proud and mighty, who in this life were strong as iron and brass, so that no one dared resist them, but they dared to fight with God, these, in the Day of Judgement, shall be most powerless, as stubble cannot resist the fire, in an everliving death."

That shall leave them neither root nor branch <sup>9</sup>"i.e. they shall have no hope of shooting up again to life; that life, I mean, which is worthy of love, and in glory with God, in holiness and bliss. For when the root has not been wholly cut away, nor the shoot torn up as from the depth, some hope is retained, that it may again shoot up. For, as it is written, <sup>10</sup>There is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease. But if it be wholly torn up from below and from its very roots, and its shoots be fiercely cut away, all hope, that it can again shoot up to life, will perish also. So, he saith, will all hope of the lovers of sin perish. For so the Divine Isaiah clearly announces, <sup>11</sup>their worm shall not die and their fire shall not be quenched, and they shall be an abhorring to all flesh."

2. But (And) unto you, who fear My Name, shall the Sun of Righteousness arise. It is said of God, <sup>12</sup>The Lord God is a sun and a shield, and, 13 The Lord shall be to thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory; thy sun shall no more go down; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light; and Zacharias, speaking of the office of S. John Baptist in the words of Malachi, thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare His way, speaks of 14 the tender mercy of our God, whereby the Dayspring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness. <sup>15</sup>He Who is often called Lord and God, and Angel and Captain of the Lord's host, and Christ and Priest and Word and Wisdom of God and Image, is now called the Sun of Righteousness. He, the Father promises, will arise, not to all, but to those only who fear His Name, giving them the light of the Sun of Righteousness, as the reward of their fear towards Him. This is God the Word Who saith, I am the Light of the world, Who was the Light of every one who cometh into the world." Primarily, Malachi speaks of our Lord's second Coming, when <sup>16</sup>to them that look for Him shall He appear, a second time unto salvation. For as, in so many places<sup>17</sup>, the Old Testament exhibits the opposite lots of the righteous and the wicked, so here the prophet speaks of the Day of Judgement, in reference to the two opposite classes, of which he had before spoken, the proud and evil doers, and the fearers of God. The title, the Sun of Righteousness, belongs to both Comings; <sup>18</sup>"in the first, He diffused rays of righteousness, whereby He justified and daily justifies any sinners whatever, who will look to Him, i.e. believe in Him and obey Him, as the sun imparts light joy and life to all who turn towards it." In the second, the righteousness which He gave, He will own and exhibit, cleared from all the misjudgement of the world, before men and Angels. Yet more, healing is, throughout Holy Scripture, used of the removal of sickness or curing of wounds, in the individual or state or Church, and, as to the individual, bodily or spiritual. So David thanks God, first for the forgiveness, <sup>19</sup>Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; then for healing of his soul, Who healeth all thy diseases; then for salvation, Who redeemeth thy life from destruction; then for the crown laid up for him, Who crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies; then, with the abiding sustenance and satisfying joy, Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things. Healing

then primarily belongs to this life, in which we are still encompassed with infirmities, and even His elect and His Saints have still, whereof to be healed. The full then and complete healing of the soul, the integrity of all its powers will be in the life to come. There, will be "<sup>1</sup> understanding without error, memory without forgetfulness, thought without distraction, love without simulation, sensation without offence, satisfying without satiety, universal health without sickness." "<sup>2</sup> For through Adam's sin the soul was wounded in understanding, through obscurity and ignorance; in will, through the leaning to perishing goods; as concupiscent, through infirmity and manifold concupiscence. In heaven Christ will heal all these, giving to the understanding light and knowledge; to the will, constancy in good; to the desire, that it should desire nothing but what is right and good. Then too the healing of the soul will be the light of glory, the vision and fruition of God, and the glorious endowments consequent thereon, oversteaming all the powers of the soul and therefrom to the body." "<sup>3</sup> God has made the soul of a nature so mighty, that from its most full beatitude, which at the end of time is promised to the saints, there shall overflow to the inferior nature, the body, not bliss, which belongs to the soul as intelligent and capable of fruition, but the fulness of health that is, the vigorousness of incorruption."

And ye shall go forth, as from a prison-house, from the miseries of this lifeless life, and grow up, or perhaps more probably, bound<sup>4</sup>, as the animal, which has been confined, exults in its regained freedom, itself full of life and exuberance of delight. So the Psalmist, <sup>5</sup> The saints shall exult in glory. And our Lord uses the like word<sup>6</sup>, as to the way, with which they should greet persecution to the utmost, for His Name's sake. Swiftmess of motion is one of the endowments of the spiritual body, after the resurrection; as the angels, to whom the righteous shall be like<sup>7</sup>, <sup>8</sup> ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning.

3. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet. It shall be a great reversal. He that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted. Here the wicked often have the pre-eminence. This was the complaint of the murderers among the Jews; in the morning of the Resurrection <sup>9</sup> the upright shall have dominion over them. The wicked, he had said, shall be as stubble, and that day <sup>10</sup> shall burn them up; here, then, they are as the ashes, the only remnant of the stubble, as the dust under the feet. "<sup>11</sup> The elect shall rejoice, that they have, in mercy, escaped such misery. Therefore they shall be kindled inconceivably with the Divine love, and shall from their inmost heart give thanks unto God." And being thus of one mind with God, and seeing all things as He seeth, they will rejoice in His judgements, because they are His. For they cannot have one slightest velleity, other than the all-perfect Will of God. So Isaiah closes his prophecy, <sup>12</sup> And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men, that have transgressed against Me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched, and they shall be an abhorring to all flesh. So <sup>13</sup> The righteous shall rejoice, when he seeth the vengeance; and another Psalmist, <sup>14</sup> The righteous shall see and rejoice; and all wickedness shall stop her mouth; and Job, <sup>15</sup> The righteous see and are glad, and the innocent laugh them to scorn.

4. Remember ye the law of Moses, My servant. <sup>16</sup> The law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ. They then who were most faithful to the law, would be most prepared for Christ. But for those of his own day, too, who were negligent both of the ceremonial and moral law, he says, "<sup>17</sup> Since the judgement of God will be so fearful, remember now unceasingly and observe the law of God given by Moses."

Which I commanded<sup>17</sup> unto him for [lit. upon, incumbent upon] all Israel. Not Moses commanded them, but God by His servant Moses; therefore He "<sup>18</sup> would in the day of judgement take strict account of each, whether they had or had not kept them. He would glorify those who obeyed, He would condemn those who disobeyed them." They had asked, Where is the God of judgement? What profit, that we have kept the ordinance? He tells them of the judgement to come, and bids them take heed, that they did indeed keep them; for there was a day of account to be held for all.

With the statutes and judgements, better, statutes and judgements, i. e. consisting in them; it seems added as an explanation of the word, law, individualising them. Duty is fulfilled, not in a general acknowledgement of law, or an arbitrary selection of some favourite commandments, which cost the human will less; as, in our Lord's time, they minutely observed the law of tithes, but <sup>19</sup> omitted weightier matters of the law, judgement, mercy, and faith. It is in obedience to the commandments, one by one, one and all. Moses exhorted to the keeping of the law, under these same words: <sup>20</sup> Now therefore hearken, O Israel, unto the statutes and judgements which I teach you, to do them, that ye may live.—Ye shall not add unto the word that I command you, neither shall ye diminish it.—Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgements, even as the Lord my God commanded me.—What nation so great, that hath statutes and judgements, righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day? The Lord commanded me at that time, to teach you statutes and judgements, that ye might do them in the land, whither ye go to possess it.

Gabriel interprets this for us, to include the sending of S. John Baptist. For he not only says<sup>1</sup> that he shall go before the Lord in the spirit and power of Elias, but describes his mission in the characteristic words of Malachi, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children: and those other words also, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, perhaps represent the sequel in Malachi, and the hearts of the children to the fathers; for their hearts could only be so turned by conversion to God, Whom the fathers, patriarchs and prophets, knew loved and served; and Whom they served in name only. S. John Baptist, in denying that he was Elias<sup>2</sup>, denied only, that he was that great prophet himself. Our Lord, in saying, <sup>3</sup> This is Elias, which was for to come, <sup>4</sup> that Elias is come already and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed, met the error of the Scribes, that He could not be the Christ, because Elias was not yet come<sup>5</sup>. When He says, <sup>6</sup> Elias truly shall first come and restore all things, He implies a coming of Elias, other than that of S. John Baptist, since he was already martyred, and all things were not yet restored. This must also be the fullest fulfilment. For the great and terrible Day of the Lord is the Day of judgement, of which all earthly judgements, however desolating, (as the destruction of Jerusalem) are but shadows and earnest. Before our Lord's coming all things looked on to His first Coming, and, since that Coming, all looks on to the Second, which is the completion of the first and of all things in time.

Our Lord's words, Elias truly shall first come and restore all things, seem to me to leave no question, that, as S. John Baptist came, in the spirit and power of Elias, before His First Coming, so, before the Second Coming, Elias should come in person, as Jews and Christians have alike expected. This has been the Christian expectation from the first. S. Justin Martyr asked his opponent<sup>7</sup>, "Shall we not conceive that the Word of God has proclaimed Elias to be the forerunner of the great and terrible day of His second Coming?" "Certainly," was Trypho's reply. S. Justin continues, "Our Lord Himself taught us in His own teaching that this very thing shall be, when He said that Elias also shall come; and we know that this shall be fulfilled, when He is about to come from Heaven in glory." Tertullian says<sup>8</sup>, "Elias is to come again, not after a departure from life, but after a translation; not to be restored to the body, from which he was never taken; but to be restored to the world, from which he was translated; not by way of restoration to life, but for the completion of prophecy; one and the same in name and in person." "Enoch and Elias were translated, and their death is not recorded, as being deferred; but they are reserved as to die, that they may vanquish Antichrist by their blood." And, in proof that the end was not yet, "No one has yet received Elias; no one has yet fled from Antichrist." And the ancient author of the verses against Marcion; "Elias who has not yet tasted the debt of death, because he is again to come into the world." Origen says simply in one place<sup>9</sup>, that the Saviour answered the question as to the objection of the Scribes, "not annulling what had been handed down concerning Elias, but affirming that there was another coming of Elias before Christ, unknown to the scribes, according to which, not knowing him, and, being in a manner, accomplices in his being cast into prison by Herod and slain by him, they had done to him what they listed." S. Hippolytus has; "As two Comings of our Lord and Saviour were indicated by the Scriptures, the first in the flesh, in dishonour, that He might be set at naught—the second in glory, when He shall come from Heaven with the heavenly host and the glory of the Father—so two forerunners were pointed out, the first, John, the son of Zacharias, and again—since He is manifested as Judge at the end of the world, His forerunners must first appear, as He says through Malachi, I will send to you Elias the Tishbite before the great and terrible day of the Lord shall come."

S. Hilary; "The Apostles enquire in anxiety about the times of Elias. To whom He answereth, that Elias will come and restore all things, that is, will recall to the knowledge of God, what he shall find of Israel; but he signifies that John came in the spirit and power of Elias, to whom they had shewn all severe and harsh dealings, that, foreannouncing the Coming of the Lord, he might be a forerunner of the Passion also by an example of wrong and harass." "We understand that those same prophets [Moses and Elias] will come before His Coming, who, the Apocalypse of John says, will be slain by Antichrist, although there are various opinions of very many, as to Enoch or Jeremiah, that one of them is to die, as Elias."

Hilary the Deacon, A.D. 355, has on the words, I suppose God hath set forth us the Apostles last; "He therefore applies these to his own person, because he was always in distress, suffering, beyond the rest, persecutions and distresses, as Enoch and Elias will suffer, who will be Apostles at the last time. For they have to be sent before Christ, to make ready the people of God, and fortify all the Churches to resist Antichrist, of whom the Apocalypse attests, that they will suffer persecutions and be slain." "When the faithless shall be secure of the kingdom of the devil, the saints, i.e. Enoch and Elias being slain, rejoicing in the victory, and sending gifts, one to another, as the Apocalypse says<sup>10</sup>, sudden destruction shall come upon them. For Christ at His Coming, shall destroy them all." S. Gregory of Nyssa quotes the prophecy under the heading, that "before the second Coming of our Lord, Elias should come."

S. Ambrose; "Because the Lord was to come down from heaven, and to ascend to heaven, He raised Elias to heaven, to bring him back to the earth at the time He should please." "The beast, Antichrist, ascends from the abyss to fight against Elias and Enoch and John, who are restored to the earth for the testimony to the Lord Jesus, as we read in the Apocalypse of John."

S. Jerome gives here the mystical meaning; "God will send, in Elias, (which is interpreted 'My God' and who is of the town Thisbe, which signifies 'conversion' or 'penitence') the whole choir of the Prophets, to convert the heart of the fathers to the sons, viz. Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and all the patriarchs, that their posterity may believe in the Lord the Saviour, in whom themselves believed: for Abraham saw the day of the Lord and was glad." Here, he speaks of the "coming of Elias before their anointed," as a supposition of <sup>5</sup> The error of the Jews consisted, not in their rooted belief, as founded on these words, that Elijah should come before the great and terrible Day of the Lord, but in their denial that He should have any forerunner of His Coming in His great humility. They erred, not in what they believed, but in what they disbelieved.

Jews and Judaizing heretics. But in commenting on our Lord's words in S. Matthew, he adheres twice to the literal meaning. "1 Some think that John is therefore called Elias, because, as, according to Malachi, at the second Coming of the Saviour2, Elias will precede and announce the Judge to come, so did John at His first Coming, and each is a messenger, of the first or second Coming of the Lord:" and again concisely, "3 He who is to come in the second Coming of the Saviour in the actual body, now comes through John in spirit and power;" and he speaks of Enoch and Elias as "4 the two witnesses in the Revelation, since, according to the Apocalypse of John, Enoch and Elias are spoken of, as having to die."

S. Chrysostome, "4 When He saith that Elias cometh and shall restore all things, He means Elias himself, and the conversion of the Jews, which shall then be; but when He saith, which was to come, He calls John, Elias, according to the manner of his ministry."

In S. Augustine's time it was the universal belief. "5 When he [Malachi] had admonished them to remember the law of Moses, because he foresaw, that they would for a long time not receive it spiritually, as it ought, he added forthwith; And I will send you Elias the Tishbite &c. That when, through this Elias, the great and wonderful prophet, at the last time before the judgement, the law shall have been expounded to them, the Jews shall believe in the true Christ, i.e. in our Christ, is everywhere in the mouths and hearts of the faithful. For not without reason is it hoped, that he shall come before the Coming of the Saviour, as Judge, because not without reason is it believed that he still lives. For he was carried in a chariot of fire from things below; which Scripture most evidently attests. When he shall come then, by expounding the law spiritually, which the Jews now understand carnally, he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children."

S. Cyril of Alexandria, his antagonist Theodoret, and Theodore of Mopsuestia, who was loose from all tradition, had the same clear belief. S. Cyril; "It is demonstrative of the gentleness and long-suffering of God, that Elias also the Tishbite shall shine upon us, to foreannounce when the Judge shall come to those in the whole world. For the Son shall come down, as Judge, in the glory of the Father, attended by the angels, and shall sit on the throne of His glory, judging the world in righteousness, and shall reward every man according to his works. But since we are in many sins, well is it for us, that the Divine Prophet goes before Him, bringing all those on earth to one mind; that all, being brought to the unity through the faith, and ceasing from evil intents, may fulfil that which is good, and so be saved when the Judge cometh down. The blessed Baptist John came before Him in the spirit and power of Elias. But, as he preached saying, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight, so also the divine Elias proclaims His then being near and all-but-present, that He may judge the world in righteousness." Theodoret; "6 Malachi teaches us how, when Antichrist shall presume on these things, the great Elias shall appear, preaching to the Jews the Coming of Christ: and he shall convert many, for this is the meaning of, he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, i.e. the Jews (for these he calls fathers, as being older in knowledge) to those who believed from the Gentiles. They who shall believe through the preaching of the great Elias, and shall join themselves to the Gentiles who seized the salvation sent to them, shall become one Church.—He hints, how when these things are done by Antichrist, S. Michael the Archangel will set all in motion, that Elias should come and foreannounce the Coming of the Lord, that the then Jews may obtain salvation." And on this place, "Knowing well, that they would neither obey the law, nor receive Him when He came, but would deliver Him to be crucified, He promises them, in His unspeakable love for man, that He will again send Elias as a herald of salvation, Lo, I will send you Elias the Tishbite. And signifying the time, He added, Before the great and terrible Day of the Lord shall come: He named the Day of His Second Coming. But He teaches us, what the great Elias shall do, when he comes, Who shall bring back the heart of the father to the son &c. And pointing out the end, for which Elias should first come, Lest I come and smite the earth utterly. For lest, finding you all in unbelief, I send you all to that endless punishment, Elias will first come, and will persuade you, O Jews, to unite you indissolubly with those, who from the Gentiles believe in Me, and to be united to My one Church."

Theodore of Mopsuestia paraphrases: "In addition to all which I have said, I give you this last commandment, to remember My law, which I gave to all Israel through Moses, plainly declaring what they ought to do in each thing, and as the first token of obedience, to receive the Lord Christ when He cometh, appearing for the salvation of all men: Who will end the law, but shew His own perfection. It had been well, had you immediately believed Him when He came, and known Him, as He Whom Moses and all the prophets signified, Who should put an end to the law, and reveal the common salvation of all men, so that it should be manifest to all, that this is the sum and chief good of the whole dispensation of the law, to bring all men to the Lord Christ, Who, for those great goods, should be manifested in His own time. But since, when He manifested Himself, ye manifested your own ungainliness, the blessed Elias shall be sent to you before the second Coming of Christ, when He will come from Heaven, to unite those who, for religion, are separated from each other, and, through the knowledge of religion, to bring the fathers to one-mindedness with the children, and in a word, to bring all men to one and the same harmony, when those, then found in ungodliness, shall receive from him the knowledge of the truth in the communion with the godly thence ensuing."

"8 Elias, borne in a chariot of fire, ascended to heaven, to come according to the prophet Malachi at the end of the world, and to precede Christ, to announce His last Coming, with great deeds and wondrous signs, so that, on earth too, Antichrist will war against him, be against him, or him who is to come with him, and will slay them; their bodies also will lie unburied in the streets. Then, raised by the Lord, they will smite the kingdom of Antichrist with a great blow. After this, the Lord will come, and will slay Antichrist with the word of His mouth, and those who worshipped him." "9 This will be in the last times, when, on the preaching of Elias, Judah will be converted to Christ."

To add one more, for his great gifts, S. Gregory the Great. "It is promised, that when Elias shall come, he shall bring back the hearts of the sons to their fathers, that the doctrine of the old, which is now taken from the hearts of the Jews, may, in the mercy of God, return, when the sons shall begin to understand of the Lord God, what the fathers taught." "Although Elias is related to have been carried to heaven, he deferred, he did not escape, death. For it is said of him by the mouth of the Truth Himself, Elias shall come and restore all things. He shall come to restore all things; for to this end is he restored to this world, that he may both fulfil the office of preaching, and pay the debt of the flesh." "The holy Church, although it now loses many through the shock of temptation, yet, at the end of the world, it receives its own double, when, having received the Gentiles to the full, all Judæa too, which shall then be, agrees to hasten to its faith. For hence it is written, Until the fulness of the Gentiles shall come, and so all Israel shall be saved. Hence in the Gospel the Truth says, Elias shall come and shall restore all things. For now the Church has lost the Israelites, whom it could not convert by preaching; but then, at the preaching of Elias, while it collects all which it shall find, it receives in a manner more fully what it has lost." "John is spoken of as to come in the spirit and power of Elias, because, as Elias shall precede the second Coming of the Lord, so John preceded His first. For as Elias will come, as precursor of the Judge, so John was made the precursor of the Redeemer. John then was Elias in spirit; he was not Elias in person. What then the Lord owned as to spirit, that John denies as to the person."

Whether Elias is one of the two witnesses<sup>5</sup>, spoken of in the Apocalypse, is obviously a distinct question. Of commentators on the Apocalypse, Arethas<sup>6</sup> remarks that as to Elias, there is clear testimony from Holy Scripture, this of Malachi; but that, with regard to Enoch, we have only the fact of his being freed from death by translation, and the tradition of the Church. S. John Damascene fixed the belief, in the Eastern Church<sup>7</sup>. In the West, Bede e.g. who speaks of the belief that the two witnesses were Elijah and Enoch, as what was said by "some doctors," takes our Lord's declaration, that Elias shall return, in its simple meaning<sup>8</sup>. Yet it was no matter of faith<sup>10</sup>. When the belief as to a personal Antichrist was changed by Luther and Calvin, the belief of a personal forerunner of Christ gave way also.

6. And he shall turn the hearts of the fathers unto the children. Now they were unlike, and severed by that likeness from each other. Yet not on earth; for on earth parents and children were alike alienated from God, and united between themselves in wickedness or worldliness. The common love of the world or of worldly pursuits, or gain or self-exaltation, or making a fortune or securing it, is, so far, a common bond of interest to those of one family, through a common selfishness, though that selfishness is the parent of general discord, of fraud, violence, and other misdeeds. Nay, conversion of children or parents becomes rather a source of discord, embittering the unconverted. Whence our Lord says, "Think not, that I am come to send peace on the earth. I came not to send peace on earth, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law: and a man's foes shall be they of his own household; a prophecy fulfilled continually in the early persecutions, even to the extent of those other words of our Lord, "the brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child; and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death." It is fulfilled also in the intense hatred of the Jews at this day, to any who are converted to Christ; a hatred which seems to have no parallel in the world. Nor do the words seem to mean that fathers and children should be united in one common conversion to God, as one says, "All shall be one heart to return to the Lord, both fathers and children;" for he speaks primarily of their mutual conversion to one another, not to God.

The form of the expression seems to imply that the effect of the preaching of Elias shall be, to bring back the children, the Jews then in being, to the faith and love which their fathers, the Patriarchs, had; that "as these believed, hoped for, longed exceedingly for, and loved Christ to come, so their sons should believe, hope in, long exceedingly for and love Christ, Who was come, yea is present; and so the heart of fathers, which before was turned from their unbelieving

Tanchum, from Maimonides, says, "This is without doubt a promise of the appearance of a prophet in Israel, a little before the coming of the Messiah; and some of the wise think that it is Elias the Tishbite himself, and this is found in most of the Midrashoth, and some think that it is a prophet like him in rank, occupying his place in the knowledge of God and the manifesting His Name and that so he is called Elijah. And so explained the great Gaon, Rab Mosheh ben Maimon, at the end of his great book on jurisprudence, called "Mishneh Torah." And, perhaps he [the person sent] may be Messiah ben Joseph, as he says again:—And the exactness of the matter in these promises will only be known, when they appear; and no one has therein any accredited account, but each of them says what he says, according to what appears to him, and what preponderates in his mind of the explanation of the truth." "The turning of the heart of the father to the children," he explains to be, "the restoration of religion, until all should be of one heart in the obedience to God." <sup>14</sup> Lap.

children, he should turn to them, now believing, and cause the Patriarchs to own and love the Jews believing in Christ, as indeed their children; for <sup>1</sup>your father Abraham rejoiced to see My day; he saw it and was glad, Christ saith."

Lest I come and smite the earth with a curse, i.e. with an utter destruction, from which there should be no redemption. In the end, God will so smite the earth, and all, not converted to Him. The prayer and zeal of Elijah will gain a reprieve, in which God will spare the world for the gathering of His own elect, the full conversion of the Jews, which shall fulfil the Apostle's words, <sup>2</sup>So shall all Israel be saved.

After the glad tidings, Malachi, and the Old Testament in him, ends with words of awe, telling us of the consequence of the final hardening of the heart; the eternal severance, when the unending end of the everlasting Gospel itself shall be accomplished, and its last grain shall be gathered into the garner of the Lord. The Jews, who would be wiser than the prophet, repeat the previous verse<sup>3</sup>, because Malachi closes so awfully. The Maker of the heart of man knew better the hearts which He had made, and taught their authors to end the books of Isaiah and Ecclesiastes with words of awe, from which man's heart so struggles to escape. To turn to God here, or everlasting destruction from His presence there, is the only choice open to thee. "Think of this, when lust goads thee, or ambition solicits thee, or anger convulses thee, or the flesh blandishes thee, or the world allures thee, or the devil displays his deceitful pomp and enticement. In thy hand and thy choice are life and death, heaven and hell, salvation and damnation, bliss or misery everlasting. Choose which thou willest. Think, 'A moment which delighteth, eternity which tortureth;' on the other hand, 'a moment which tortureth, eternity which delighteth.'"
